

COUNCIL HAS SPAT OVER BAR LICENSE

Commissioners Hummel and Kugel Take Issue with Mayor Over Permit to Anton Fowl.

TELLS KUGEL TO GET ON JOB

The habit of considering liquor license applications in open sessions, to which the city council is becoming addicted, resulted in an exchange of pointed remarks when the council sat as an excise board yesterday.

The ruction was started when the application of Anton Fowl for a license at 201 South Ninth street was considered. Commissioner Kugel announced that Fowl had violated the liquor laws during the year and had received a complaint from Mayor Dahlman, who reported that officials of the smelter protested because some of their employes had been rendered unfit for work while at this saloon.

Mayor Dahlman put the vote and announced the license was granted, whereupon Commissioner Hummel, who voted no, insisted that a regular roll call be read by the clerk, as the commissioner wished his vote against the license to be a matter of record.

This situation brought a statement from the mayor, who said he thought the council had adopted the policy that all the commissioners would vote as a unit on saloon licenses. Commissioners Kugel and Hummel took issue with the mayor and announced they would vote their individual convictions.

Man Tries to Stop Women in Auto

What may have been a bold attempt at highway robbery was reported to the police yesterday by Mrs. Harry H. Knapp, 321 Florence boulevard. She said she was driving her car along Lake street, accompanied by Mrs. Ruth Hayden, when at Thirty-fifth street a man jumped out of the weeds and tried to stop them.

HOW TO PICK YOUR TURKEY

Expert on Gobblers Tells How Simple it is When You Really Know How.

SOME SIGNS OF TENDERNESS

"The purchase of a Christmas turkey ought not to be the gamble that it sometimes is. The selection of a tender, toothsome bird, old enough to be well flavored but young enough to be palatable, is really a very simple operation—once you know how."

The speaker was a man who professes a lengthy title, which might easily be known more about turkeys, their breeding and their selection than any one in the United States—Harry M. Jones of the United States—Harry M. Jones, chief of the bureau of animal industry of the Department of Agriculture, shortened into "Uncle Sam's Turkey Expert."

"The best turkey for home consumption," continued this man, who has studied turkey raising in all parts of the country, "is one about a year old. If it is too young the meat will taste 'flat'; if it is too old the labor of mastication will probably be too hard. As a general thing a hen turkey is better than a 'gobbler', and care must be exercised to insure tenderness by feeling the flesh and lifting up the wing to see whether the skin breaks easily. The older a bird the tougher the skin.

The Point of a Turkey. "Then, too, the prospective buyer should see that the turkey is well fleshed across the loins or thighs. The average buyer looks at the breast of a turkey and lets it go at that. The thighs are a much better criterion. If the bird is well fleshed there, it is almost a certainty that it will prove abundantly supplied with meat on the breast, and the contrary is not always the rule. Consideration of these two points—age and the degree of flesh—will insure to the purchaser the maximum of pleasure for the minimum of cost. It will make the principal part of the Christmas dinner a feast for an epicure.

"There is one more point that I ought to emphasize: Do not select too small a turkey for the number of persons you expect to feed. If you don't care to cook a very large turkey, buying three may be old and tough, instead of two small ones—but, by all means, have enough and to spare. That is, in some respects, the most important of all the points to be observed in the purchasing of the holiday fowl."

In answer to an inquiry as to the prospects for the Christmas crop of turkeys this year, Mr. Lamson said: "The outlook was never better. Reports from all sections of the country indicate that this will be a banner winter for the American national bird. Thanksgiving showed that turkeys were abundant and, in most sections of the United States, comparatively cheap. The price will naturally rise a few cents before Christmas—the result of the inexorable law of supply and demand—but, at that, I do not think that it will come near the high mark set in other years.

Texas in the Lead. "In the first place, there is a larger crop of turkeys from Texas this year than last. Texas is the best state in the union when it comes to turkey raising. A good many of the birds also come from Missouri, Tennessee and Kentucky. California, too, is breaking into the turkey game on a large scale, but not so many of its birds are to be found in the east. California may some day monopolize the turkey trade; they have the habit of doing things very well out there—but at present the center of the industry remains in the southern United States.

The annual turkey drive is well on its way by this time, the crest of the first wave having been reached a week before Thanksgiving. The second influx reaches its high-water mark shortly before Christmas, and the time then recedes until, shortly after February 1, turkeys become scarcer and scarcer. Many persons, whose sole acquaintance with the national bird consists of consuming it at the table, are unaware of the fact that there are many kinds and varieties of turkey, not all of them suited for home consumption. The bronze turkey is the most popular, and therefore the one that is most in demand in the eastern markets. Texas raises great numbers of these birds, and there are many of them to be found in northern New York and central Illinois. It is from these turkey centers that the New York and Boston markets are principally supplied, the transportation charges rendering it inexpedient to import birds from the Texas or California market.

Great Turkey Parades. "Texas, particularly, has been unceasing in its efforts to break into the exclusive turkey trade of the big cities, and everything possible has been done to foster the raising of these birds in the Lone Star state. It was there that the 'turkey trot' originated—no, I don't mean the dance (that is supposed to have started on the San Francisco Barbary coast, I believe)—the turkey trot I mean is an annual celebration intended to foster turkey raising. Great turkey parades are held and prizes awarded to the most valuable birds. The turkeys are sold in large quantities, thousands at a time, right on their feet, and the 'trot' are becoming more and more occasions for rivalry between breeders, and, therefore, assist greatly in the propagation of the better species. America is the premier turkey country of the world, and it is only fitting that everything possible should be done by us to bring this fowl to the highest state of perfection.

Rhode Island's Distinction. "The growing of turkeys appears to have improved as a result of a determined effort on the part of producers of what is known as 'standard-bred' or 'exhibition' stock to demonstrate that it is more profitable to use pure breeding stock than the smaller and less vigorous stock of days gone by. It is due to these efforts that the turkey-growing industry of the country has benefited so materially during the last three decades for the consumer can now purchase a far finer bird on the open market than he could have secured from a poultry fancier twenty years ago.

"This movement on the part of turkey growers has also supplied new, rich, vigorous blood throughout the whole country, adding strength, and thereby building up the stock which had become deteriorated through the carelessness of producers themselves. Throughout the country the attention of turkey growers has been called to the successful production of market turkeys in the state of Rhode Island. Unquestionably some of the best market turkeys produced in the world have been sent out of this state, but even there, a number of years ago, the art was in danger of being lost through careless handling of breeding stock. Other states may claim the title of 'cradle of liberty' and the birthplace of presidents, but to Rhode Island belongs the name of 'saver of the turkey,' for it was Rhode Island that fostered the breeding of these birds at a time when other states were paying them scant attention.

Intermed Germans Help American in a Battle with Yaquis

QUATMAS, Mex., Dec. 22.—(By Radio to San Diego, Cal.)—Generals Madrid and Estrada left here today with twelve carloads of troops for the American settlement at San Pedro, where an attack by Yaqui Indians was reported yesterday, and where fighting is reported still in progress. Another troop train of twenty-eight cars passed through Hermosillo early today, and General Obregon, the Carranza commander, has ordered sixty cars made ready to carry troops south. Admiral Winslow, commander-in-chief of the Pacific fleet, was in conference here with General Obregon up to a late hour last night, and the military activity is believed to be the result of Admiral Winslow's insistence that relief and protection be afforded settlers in the valley.

According to reports received by the American consul here Americans at Onaguato have been ordered to leave by Colonel Estrada, as he was about to withdraw his troops.

A. Z. Stocker, one of the settlers, telegraphed that the Indians had taken possession of the San Pedro and the Caliente ranches and that fighting was in progress on a ranch about five miles south of Onaguato, where an American named Bruce has a well protected blockhouse and five seamen from an interned German merchantman to help him.

GERMAN STEAMERS ARE SUNK IN MARMORA SEA

LONDON, Dec. 22.—An Athens dispatch to Reuter's Telegram company says that a British submarine has sunk the German steamer Lerma and other craft in the sea of Marmora.

The steamer Lerma was owned by the Deutsche Levante line. It was 2,679 tons and 291 feet long and was built in 1906. When last reported it was at Constantinople.
