KAISER MAKES NEW SEA LAW TO APPLY TO THE FRYE CASE

United States, would be to throw into the prize courts for decision all cases of whether destruction of an American vessel constituted an extreme case of military necessity. International law, outside of treaty stipulations, has constrained many a moot case on that point. While the declaration of London established finally, that in case of military necessity a ship, whose cargo was more than half contraband, could be destroyed after passengers and crew were removed to a place of safety, the declaration was not ratified by the United States, express notice having been given again by the American government to Germany in the note of April 28 that the declaration was not regarded as in force.

Feet of Note. The following is the German reply: "FOREIGN OFFICE, BERLIN, June 7, 1915.—The undersigned has the honor to make the following reply to the note of his excellency, Mr. James W. Gerard, ambassador of the United States of America, dated April 30, 1915, Foreign Office No. 231, on the subject of the sinking of the American sailing vessel, William P. Frye, by the German auxiliary cruiser, Prinz Eitel Friedrich.

"The German government cannot admit that, as the American government assumed, the destruction of the sailing vessel mentioned constituted a violation of the treaties concluded between Prussia and the United States at an earlier date, and now applicable to the relations between the German empire and the United States, of the American rights derived therefrom. For these treaties did not have the intention of depriving one of the contracting parties engaged in war of the right of stopping the supply of contraband to his enemy, when he recognizes the supply of such as detrimental to his military interests.

Old Treaty is Quoted. "On the contrary, article 12 of the Prussian-American treaty of July 11, 1796, expressly reserves to the party at war the right to stop the carrying of contraband and to detain the contraband. It follows then that if it cannot be accomplished in any other way, the stopping of the supply may in the extreme case be effected by the destruction of the contraband and of the ship carrying it. As a matter of course, the obligation of the party at war to pay compensation to the parties interested of the neutral contracting party, remains in force, whatever be the manner of stopping the supply.

"According to general principles of international law, any exercise of the right of control over the trade in contraband is subject to the decision of the prize courts, even though such right may be restricted by special treaties. "At the beginning of the present war, Germany, pursuant to these principles, established by law prize proceedings for cases of the kind under consideration. The case of William P. Frye is likewise the subject to the German prize jurisdiction for the Prussian-American treaties mentioned contain no stipulation to the amount of the compensation provided by article 12 of the treaties cited to be fixed.

Prize Proceedings Indispensable. "The German government therefore complies with its treaty obligations to a full extent when the prize courts instituted by it in accordance with international law proceed in pursuance to the treaty stipulation and thus award the disinterested an equitable indemnity. There would therefore be no foundation for a claim of the American government, unless the prize court should grant indemnity in accordance with the treaty; in such event, however, the German government would not hesitate to arrange for equitable indemnity, notwithstanding. "For the rest, prize proceedings of the case of the Frye are indispensable, apart from the American claims for the reason that other claims of the neutral and enemy interested parties are to be considered in the matter.

"As was stated in the note of April 4 last, the prize court should have to decide the question whether the destruction of the ship and cargo was legal, whether and under what condition, the property sunk was liable to confiscation and to whom and in what amount indemnity is to be paid provided application is received. "Since the decision of the prize court must first be awaited before any further position is taken by the German government, the simplest way for the American interested parties to settle their claims would be to enter them in the competent records in accordance with the provision of the German code of prize proceeding.

"The undersigned begs to suggest that the ambassador bring the above to the knowledge of his government and avail himself, etc. (Signed) VON JAGOW, "Minister for Foreign Affairs."

The treaty of 1796 with Prussia, to which the German note refers, expired by its own limitations in 1810, but its provisions, which are applicable to the present case, were revived by articles of the treaty of 1828. The American government in its negotiations on the Frye case has referred to the treaty of 1828, while the German replies have referred to it as the treaty of 1796.

HUGHES AND KOHN PULL A COME-BACK

After Absence of Six Years from Tennis Court This Duo Comes Back and is Victorious.

TRIM VAN CAMP AND CULKINS

Six years ago Jack Hughes and prominent member of the Field and Country clubs, heaved his tennis racket into the discard and announced he was through with the court sport. He declared with emphasis that he would devote all his attention to golf. He did. And he soon became one of the three best golfers in the state and was one year state champion.

For six years Hughes stuck to his assertion and played no tennis. But Wednesday evening the old fever returned. It was out at the Field club. Hughes ran across Herb Kohn, who played his last real game of tennis five years ago, when he was beaten in the finals for the city championship by Cub Potter. The old fever had also secured a strangle hold on Kohn.

Wandering around the club house these two vets who had played no tennis in years, encountered Doc Van Camp. With Van Camp was Culkins, an old Lincoln crack. The conversation centered around the court game and before any of the four realized what had happened a doubles match had been framed. Hughes and Kohn were paired against Van Camp and Culkins.

It was a hot combat and one would have thought the championship of the universe hung in the balance. Van Camp and Culkins took the first set 7-5. With determination written all over their faces Hughes and Kohn set to their task and won the second set 7-5. The third and deciding set went to Hughes and Kohn 6-4 and when the announcement was made tennis enthusiasts at the club were forced to take refuge in the well known buffet to quiet startled nerves.

And They Do Return

Seven years ago Hughes and Kohn were recognized as two of the best
