CHOOSING THE SCHOOL

STUDENTS COME FROM FAR

Western Schools Have Attractions that Draw the Ambitious and Enterprising.

ECONOMY AND HIGH STANDARDS

While many western students go to the large eastern educational institutions, it is also true that many eastern students come to the western educational institutions.

The list of students at all the institutions in this part of the west will show a large percentage from all over the country, exclusive of those who live in the west, and also many from other lands, from Porto Rico to Japan.

What brings these students here? There are several considerations that make for this gathering of students from all over the globe.

One important factor is the cheapness of education here. And in this connection "cheapness" is used in its purely pecuniary sense, meaning the cost of getting it and not the quality of it.

For while the cost is absolutely the lowest, the quality of the education is just as absolutely of the highest.

Some facts are attractive figures. When a leading institution advertises "splendid board at $1.75 to $2 a week" it means something and is a matter of very large consideration. That sum would not much more than buy one day's board at some of the more "stylish" institutions.

Another institution in Nebraska, of the primary class, advertises "forty weeks' board, room and tuition, $122."

In the language of the street "it can't be beat." The University of Pennsylvania, for example, charges more than that for tuition alone. And board and room in Philadelphia for forty weeks would come to at least $200 additional.

Besides, in that state and somewhat arid institution there are only a very few courses open to women at any price. It is chiefly a man's institution. The young woman of Pennsylvania who wants to go to the state's institution of learning finds its doors shut in her face.

Experience of One Girl. So you will find in western institutions the names of many students from the east. One such young woman is known to the writer. She finished the high school in Philadelphia and then inquired at the university. She found she could get no education to speak of there because she was a woman.

She found, moreover, that she couldn't go to Bryn Mawr, located in a suburb of the city, because the family exchequer wouldn't yield the $150 needed annually for tuition.

It was then that she was told of the University of Nebraska, an institution fully the equal in scholastic standing and attainments of Pennsylvania and a place where tuition was free.

She could hardly believe the good news, but sent for a catalogue immediately, and then discovered that it was, indeed, true. A non-resistant fee of $9 a year was not sufficient to deter her from these advantages. She and her mother, packed the family effects and came to Nebraska last fall and she is now attending the university.

Now did they come alone. Two of her high school classmates, who had also found their education curtailed by the limitations of the university and the restrictions of the women's colleges, came with her under the chaperonage of her mother. And there the three of them are now pursuing the courses of study in the University of Nebraska.

Not a Sectional School. Next to the quality of freedom which the higher education in Nebraska shows is that of cosmopolitanism. There is no provincialism or sectionalism about Nebraska. Its institutions are as open and free and broad as the state's broad plains. What a man or woman is counts for more than where he is from or how much money his father has.

The healthfulness of Nebraska's climate is another consideration and there are many people attending the institutions of this and neighboring states who are at the same time building up their health with the fine air and food and water of this part of the country.

Nowhere in the world are there so many rapidly-growing institutions of learning as here in the middle western country.

It has passed the hard pioneer years when poverty was abroad. It has come out of the broad plain of poverty. It has more automobiles per 1,000 population than any other part of the world.

This is not important in itself but indicates the prosperity of its people. It is now no longer necessary to struggle for existence. Now is the time when the people are enjoying the higher things of life and are turning their attention to education for the coming generations.

Monday to Be Omaha Road Night at Den

Monday night is to be M. & O. night at Ak-Sar-Ben den. The towns along the Omaha railroad are to come in on a special train from Tekamah. Candidates from the towns further up will reach there in time to take the train down to Omaha. Thus candidates for the initiation are to come from Oakland, Lyons, Herman, Tekamah, Calhoun, and in fact every town along the road clear to Sioux City.

How many there will be no one will know until Samson tallies them at the gate, Samson, or his big-stick man, "Dad" Weaver, has been at Cheyenne most of the week busting bronchos at the Frontier day celebration with the Omaha crowd of a couple of hundred fellows. Samson is due to return to Omaha today, however. When he comes he will have some new ideas on initiation contraptions, and may even take it into his bonnet to bring a new and ferocious horse back with him.

PLANS COMMUNITY SITE OF FACTORIES

Shields' Idea of Locating Series of Co-operative Plants Receives Considerable Support.

COST REDUCTION MADE POSSIBLE

A flock of factories in a community somewhere along a strip of good trackage in Omaha, is the goal of a big proposition to which Fred C. Shields is now giving a great deal of attention, and on which he is doing a great deal of negotiating. Mr. Shields is the man who, a week ago, closed the numerous deals secured for the Ford Automobile company its site for the big assembling plant at Sixteenth and Cumine streets. No sooner did he complete these negotiations than he began to attack the proposition of acquiring ground for a flock of community factories with renewed vigor.

During the last three years Mr. Shields has devoted considerable time to the formulation of this plan. It contemplates acquiring a large tract of ground with good trackage facilities, then building factories to suit tenants, and leasing these to manufacturing concerns.

Co-operative Economy. The plan is one that contemplates a system of economy that would be beneficial to all. In the first place, a system of drainage would be worked out that would make all hauling cheaper for all concerns than it would be for any one concern isolated far from other factories. One water meter would be put in on the main that led to the flock of plants. Thus the water rate of a large consumer would be obtainable. Then individual meters would be installed in each plant so that the water rent might be equitably pro-rated. The electric light and gas meters would be handled the same way so that the flock of companies might get the benefit of the lower rates per unit charged the large consumer.

Everything else would be worked out with the same idea of economy of taking service in large quantities. Mr. Shields is negotiating with three or four manufacturing plants of Omaha that are well established here, but are willing to change their location if this community system can be worked out to their satisfaction, besides this he has one or two outside concerns that are anxious to locate a manufacturing plant in Omaha, and are negotiating with Shields for one of the sites he proposes to prepare for this purpose.

Site to Be on Belt Line. It is practically assured that the site, if it finally develops, will be somewhere along the Belt line of railway. It must be a site that combines convenient location, railroad trackage, street car facilities and all the public improvement and utility advantages.

The project contemplates one general plant for furnishing heat while the promoters will supply gas, electric light and water, all on a percentage basis. Tentative arrangements have been made with one of the railways to build spurs and a freight depot on the grounds. Each building erected would be constructed for the specific use to which the factory proposes to put it. All buildings
