Pioneer Woman Who Had Thrilling Times With the Redskins

e Lowe of the Edward Lynch players at the Brandels theater is in an unusually happy state of mind just now Her Aunt Kate is here from Syracuse, Neb. The name of the relative is in-soribed on the register at the Wellington as "Mrs. Kate Hedges," but Miss Lowe calls her "Aunt Kate."

Mrs. Hedges has resided on the same site at Syracuse since 1861, when she and husband, Rochester Hedges, arrived by steamer from Cincinnati. Mr. Hedges was state representative in 1864-1865. Mrs. Hedges is recounting for the particular benefit of Miss Lowe experiences with the Indians fifty years ago. On one eccasion she compelled three Indians to disarm before they entered her home. These redskins were begging food and clothes and presented a formidable appearance at the Hedges' kitchen door, with guns and bows and arrows and with an Indian was when a brave started to follow her upstairs by way of the old-fashioned ladder used in the pioneer nomes. She scared the Indian by throwing a rolling pin at him.

Watchman Keeps Eye On School Children

A Missouri Pacific watchman is now ationed at the Martha street crossing of the Belt Line, largely as a result of meetings.

Some weeks ago the club started an agitation for a viaduct at that point and another at the point where the sunker coulevard crosses Pacific street. Another scoting is to be held Friday evening of his week, when these questions of the inducts are to be further discussed

The Martha street crossing of the Bell Line was considered especially dangerous to children that had to cross there to get to Windsor school. Freight trains awitching and moving about frequently have occasion to stop at that point, thus blocking the path and the crossing. School children in a hurry to get to the Windsor school in the morning long have een in the habit of climbing under the cars to get to school. It was this practice that alarmed the people of the district and led to the demand for a viaduct and for a watchman at that point.
