AN OMAHA maid, Miss Mona Cowell, has completely captured the hearts of the southerners in Richmond, where she was visiting, according to the Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Miss Cowell was the guest of the St. John Duvals and Miss Mary Higgins, the latter formerly of Omaha, at "Orapax," the country estate of the St. John Duvals. "Orapax" is the old home of Pocahontas and is mentioned in Mary Johnston's "To Have and to Hold." It is the place where Chief Powhatan, father of Pocahontas, signed his treaty of peace with the white men. The St. John Duvals are of the Virginia Randolphs, descendants of Pocahontas.

Miss Cowell so endeared herself to the charming southerners that when they learned Miss Cowell is planning to study law this winter they exacted a promise that she would return to Richmond to practice law after obtaining her degree.

But here arose an obstacle. The statutes of Virginia do not permit a woman to practice law in that state.

So small a trifle did not daunt the chivalrous southerners, not where a fair and charming maiden was concerned.

"We will have the law changed. We will enact a law providing recognition for women lawyers," they chorused. So Miss Cowell promised, according to the story.

After an exceedingly gay visit in Richmond Miss Cowell attended the reunion of her class at Vassar college and later will be the guest of friends at West Point for several of the fall hops at the military academy.

Leola Brandeis Writes a Feature Story for "Life"

Miss Leola Brandeis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Brandeis, who has made a considerable reputation as a writer, had a signed feature story in Life last week. It is here reproduced:

THE WORK OF THE DEVIL.
The subject had turned to betting. The nervous little man, who had been silent all evening, suddenly spoke.

"Betting," he said, "is the work of the devil and should be prohibited by law. If you lose, you feel defrauded by fate; if you win—" he broke off and shuddered.

We waited for him to continue. People who rarely speak are sometimes listened to.

"Once," he said, "I made a bet. On a train. The most beautiful girl in the world sat across the aisle. I said to my friend, 'That's the kind of a girl I want to marry.'"

"He said: 'I dare you to go up and propose to her.'"

"I bet," I answered, "I could get acquainted with her that way."

"He said: 'I bet you'd be thrown off the train.'"

"So we bet—cigars. I used to smoke then."

"I went up to her and said: 'Madam, you are the most beautiful woman in the world. Will you marry me?'"

The silent man stopped again and wiped the perspiration from his forehead.

"Did you win?" he prompted.

"Worse than that," he answered. "She said to me: 'Sir, I am bored to death. I will marry you.' And she did, at the next stop."

"Betting," replied the nervous little man, with more or less relevance, according to the way you view such things, "is the work of the devil and should be prohibited by law."

And he sank back into his dark corner gloomily.
