BIG PROBLEM FOR ENGLAND

British Begin Figuring on How to Provide for the Thousands of Exiled Belgians.

NO SOLUTION IS YET OFFERED

(Correspondence of Associated Press.) LONDON, March 31.—The problem of providing employment and proper habitations for the Belgian refugees, both in Holland and in England, is daily growing more urgent, in the opinion of Percy Alden, member of Parliament, who has represented the British government in its dealings with the refugee question since the beginning of the war.

The number of Belgian refugees in England is now officially estimated, according to a government statement in the House of Commons, at 180,000, not including 18,000 wounded soldiers in British hospitals. This total consists of 65,000 men, 80,000 women and 45,000 children under 16.

"I feel very strongly," says Dr. Alden in a statement to the public, "that, through lack of work and proper housing, these Belgians run a serious risk of returning home at the end of the war in a demoralized and deteriorated condition. In Holland especially the method of dealing with the refugees is still of a temporary and unsatisfactory nature; they are living in churches, schools, barns, sheds and hangers, and the food they are receiving is none too good. As to the employment question, little or no attempt has been made to deal with it, either in Holland or England.

"I have made several visits to Holland at the request of the president of the local government board, to investigate conditions there. England and Holland are faced with a very awkward task, but a serious attempt will have to be made, and that soon, to provide remunerative work and adequate residence for these people.

"My belief is that the next step should be the building of some thousands of wooden huts, each containing three rooms, which could be constructed by the refugees themselves, and could be taken to pieces at the end of the war and transferred to various parts of Belgium to be used as dwellings until permanent homes can be built. The building of the huts could be made to provide work for many thousand refugees. I calculate that at least $500,000 will be required for the adequate launching of this scheme. It is the only way I know in which a proper semblance of family life can be restored to these Belgians during their temporary exile from their own country."
