rooms which are rented out for business purposes.

The club rooms are in the rear part and are entered from a door at the side of the building.

Here are found, among other things, billiard and pool rooms with six tables, a gymnasium completely equipped, 2x20 feet in size, a circulating library with several thousand volumes and the office of Mr. Foster.

The furnishings will all be of very high grade and all appointments of the very latest. For example three lights of special design are placed over each of the billiard tables instead of two, which is the usual number.

Baths and Bowling Alleys.
In the basement of the building, which is also substantially finished, are found three shower baths and two bowling alleys.

So far as is known there is no other house like this owned by a Woodmen lodge anywhere in the United States.

It is absolutely a unique project carried to completion by the determination of a few men who were not afraid to go ahead with it even if it never had been done before. Officers of the Sovereign camp who have seen it have been absolutely astounded at its completeness.

And one of the best features of it is that everything has been done on sound business principles and all the axes in

NOW IN A HOME OF ITS OWN

Druid Camp, Woodmen of the World, Completes a Palatial Temple and Club House on Ames Avenue.

PERFECT IN ALL APPOINTMENTS

"Where there's a will there's a way," says the old adage.

And here is a story that proves it, a true story about people right here in Omaha.

For nine years Druid camp No. 24, Woodmen of the World, met in Frenser hall, Twenty-fourth and Parker streets. It was a small hall for the growing camp and there were no conveniences.

The men might have stood for these things, but there was one inconvenience that they didn't like. This was the fact that there was but one room in this hall and the ladies' auxiliary, Welcome grove, could not meet the same evening as the Druid camp. When meetings were over there was a very general desire for the company of the fair sex.

"Let's put up a building of our own," said E. I. Foster, one evening after the inconveniences of Frenser hall had been discussed.

"Ha, ha," said his fellow Woodmen.

"I mean it," said Mr. Foster.

"Send for the wagon," said some one.

But the jokes and jokes had no effect on Foster. He believed thoroughly in his idea and he argued and reasoned so thoroughly that before a great while, he had his fellow members believing that this thing could be done.

Then they began to figure and finally they organized a stock company. It wasn't long before $7,000 was pledged toward the building.

"And then," says Mr. Foster, "along came the tornado and blew all our plans away."

Knew What They Wanted.
But with the liquidation of the stock company the ambitions of the Druid campers simply solidified. They just knew they never would be happy without that building they had been planning for. They had been living in that new building in thought and they just had to have it. That was all there was to it.

So they interested outside capital. With 500 solid citizens backing the project outside capital soon sat up and looked interested. Ideas took shape in excavation, stone, brick, mortar, iron work.

And there stands the building on Ames avenue, west of Twenty-fourth street, one of the handsomest buildings in the city for its size with external architecture that is very pleasing to the eye and inside conveniences and appointments that are a delight to several lodges that will find meeting places there.

The building is two stories and basement, but the stories are so liberal in height that it rises to the height of most three-story structures. It has a frontage of seventy feet on Ames avenue and a depth of 100 feet.

A broad stairs leads from the street to the second floor where are the two main meeting rooms, with assembly rooms and check rooms and kitchen.

The main room where Druid camp will meet measures 6x50 feet. Back of this is the smaller lodge room, 32x42 feet in size. Both rooms have polished hardwood floors so that they are perfectly equipped for dancing. Both are without supporting posts, the ceiling being upheld by four structural steel bridges weighing five and one-half tons each. The ceilings themselves are of pressed steel and there is a ventilating system which draws the air through openings in the ceilings.

A music balcony is let into the wall of the larger room where an orchestra will sit to dispense music for the tepal-shorean festivities.

Complete Club House.
Opening off of this room is a large locker room. A number of spacious closets open off of this room. One of these will be assigned to each lodge that rents the rooms. Of course, Druid camp and Welcome grove will use the rooms only one night each week. On the other nights they will be rented to other lodges.

A completely equipped kitchen is next to this room and so located that a banquet can be served in either or both of the big rooms at once. A large ante room opens off of the smaller lodge room also.

The check room at the entrance is very spacious, having 16 boxes or bins and plenty of floor space for the erection of 100 coats if they shall be found necessary.

Now comes the most wonderful part of this building. For it is a complete club house for the use of the members of the camp. It will be open all day and every day and in charge of Clerk E. I. Foster, who is also financial secretary and he will have posted men under him, one in charge of the billiard and pool rooms, one in charge of the bowling alleys and showers and one who will be a janitor.

The main floor is given up chiefly to these club rooms. The portion facing on the street is occupied by three large store

REDICK SAYS BREAD LAW IS NOT GOOD

Holds City Ordinance Requiring Certain Size Loaves is Unconstitutional.

LOAVES MAY BE OF ANY SIZE

Omaha's bread ordinance passed in 1892 defining the legal weight of a loaf of bread as sixteen or thirty-two ounces was held unconstitutional by District Judge Redick, who sustained the plea of the Jay Burns Baking company in the case in which it was charged with selling short weight bread.

The judge held that "the ordinance is unreasonable and an unlawful interference with the liberty of the defendant and other bakers of the city in the carrying on of their business."

It is understood that the city will appeal from the decision, although its attorneys were not prepared to announce this at once.

Judge Redick said in one paragraph of his decision: "That the sale of bread is a proper subject for regulation under the police power is beyond dispute and a great number of such regulations have been passed and approved by the courts and the charter of the city of Omaha contains ample authority for the legislature to enact ordinances on the subject."

The following language was employed in the judge's decision knocking out the ordinance: "The only grounds upon which ordinances of this character have ever been sustained or upheld are for the protection of the health of the community by prescribing the character of materials which shall enter into a loaf and the manner in which a loaf shall be marketed, as, for example, requiring it to be wrapped and such other sanitary regulations as may be proper, and, second, as a means of protecting the public against imposition by the sale of underweight bread. This protection may be afforded without requiring allowances to measure up to the full standard unit, but permitting half, three-quarter and other weight loaves to be sold under proper restrictions as to labeling."

CARNATIONS SOLD TO HELP HOSPITAL

Invade Down Town Streets to Raise Funds for the Swedish Mission Hospital.

GOODLY SUM BEING REALIZED

Almost 100 young women with pretty bouquets of carnations invaded downtown Omaha, selling the pretty posies for the benefit of the charity fund of the Swedish Mission hospital. They were accorded a generous response, and early indications were that about 10,000 blossoms would be disposed of, at a net profit for the hospital of approximately $1,000.

The hospital, which is at 806 North Twenty-fourth street, gave a similar carnation day last year and raised about the sum expected to result from this season's campaign. Rev. E. M. Westlund, superintendent of the institution, was in charge of the flower day headquarters at 1233 Hawley street, directed by W. H. Thomas & Son.

Miss Hilma Carlson, matron of the hospital, and several of the nurses directed the flower girls and young women, who found thousands of persons willing to exchange a dime, quarter or larger coin for a flower when the hospital was to get the profit.

Mrs. Paul Weimer set a lively pace for the other flower sellers to follow, for by 8:30 o'clock she had disposed of two bunches of carnations for $1.32 and $1.26, respectively. Miss C. Hansen was the first to turn in money from a bunch of the flowers and she also did well, with $9.85.

Other early workers to insure funds for the charity department of the hospital were:

Mrs. E. W. Powell, Mrs. C. H. Ballard, Mrs. Charles Liber, Mrs. V. P. Unit, Mrs. Roy A. Dodge and the Misses Adelia Swanson, E. M. Holsten, Epsilon, Irene McCoy, Louise McCune, Irene Powell and Edna Reap.

Each carried a special sealed box, into which donors dropped whatever coins they wished to give for the flowers.

TOM HUGHES IN ST. LOUIS HOSPITAL: BLOOD POISON

T. F. Godfrey, general agent of the passenger department of the Missouri Pacific, has gone to St. Louis to visit Tom Hughes, traveling passenger agent of the same road, who is in the hospital there.

Some four weeks ago one of Mr. Hughes' shoes rubbed a blister on one of his heels. It was opened and refused to heal, after which he went to the hospital for treatment. Now word comes from there that surgeons have made its appearance and that there are strong symptoms of diabetes.
