Factory Methods in the Home Urged as a Great Need Among Americans.

NEWS FROM STATE COLLEGES

Factory legislation, the eight-hour law, as well as some of the methods of modern industry, are needed in many kitchens, according to Mrs. Iris Frouty O'Leary, whose bulletin on "Cooking as a Training for Home-Making Vocational Schools" has just been issued by the United States Bureau of Education.

"Housekeeping lacks the spirit and inspiration of teamwork," says Mrs. O'Leary. "The woman who has once been in industry misses the companionship to which she has become accustomed. She finds herself, therefore, without a sense incentive to speed and quality of work."

Home-making outranks all other trades in the number of persons employed, according to the bulletin. Of the 31,000,000 of women over 10 years old in the United States, 24,000,000 are engaged in home-making. Mrs. O'Leary points out that "while girls may enter other trades, the great majority of women become, at one time or other, home-makers. Wage earning for them is but a temporary affair, which they will leave for a permanent position in their own homes."

The bulletin lays emphasis on the fact that cooking is a scientific process and should be taught as such, especially in the new vocational schools that are being established. "Ability to cook is something which every girl is by tradition endowed. No number of poor cooks seems to offset the belief that still in this trade will come at the call of necessity. The aim of trade training in cooking through the vocational schools is to teach the subject in such a way as to give actual ability to do this work under home conditions and in a professional manner."
