Brodegaard's Plan for Branch Stores Finds Imitation

If imitation is the sincerest flattery, Fred Brodegaard, the Omaha jeweler has cause to consider himself duly flattered, since his scheme of doing business through 250 branch stores in Nebraska and Iowa is to be imitated by one of the largest "store" incorporations in United States.

"The Mail Order Journal" gives details about the United Clear Stores plan, identically the same system which Brodegaard's company inaugurated in 1912 for placing a high-grade of watches and jewelry with responsible firms in smaller towns.

"While the United Cigar Stores Co. has stores of its own in nearly all larger cities and in the largest even quite a number of them, it is now reaching out to cover the smaller towns by inducing cigar dealers in such places to act as selling agents for its goods.

"Agencies so far started have been near New York City but as the demand for agencies is increasing, it is probable that the country will be divided into districts."

"I think a good deal of business in the smaller towns will be done on the plan in the future," says Mr. Brodegaard, "because it is a real boon to the consumer as well as to the town merchant. On the other hand our company is built up entirely on Nebraska and Iowa capital, lots of it being supplied by small investors, and in this manner I think we have successfully scattered the 'mail order scare,' which was the small town merchant's bugaboo a few years ago.

FICKS GETS OUT OF PARIS

Omaha People Have Strenuous Time When War is Declared.

SAILING OF BOAT IS DELAYED

Wait Ten Days Aboard Vessel Before It is Permitted to Leave Port for the United States.

Alex Fick, a broker in the Omaha National Bank building, and his wife, have just returned from France, where they were enjoying a vacation when the war broke between France and the Germans.

He intended to leave August 1, but when the sailing of the German boat was cancelled he transferred his transportation to a French line. As the La France, the boat he intended to return on, left Havre, he was compelled to get passports.

"The German cafes were destroyed," declared Mr. Fick, "and the French cafes announced no change would be given when payment was tendered. Because of this many Americans suffered, but we were fortunate, as we had American Express company traveling checks and were able to cash them for the smallest coins.

"I waited in line four hours to secure railroad transportation from Paris to Havre. Then we were forced to be at the station at 7 o'clock in the morning to board the train which left at 8. The trip, usually taking four and a half hours, took ten hours.

"Then when we reached Havre the La France did not sail. We waited ten days aboard that boat. The sanitary conditions became bad and the food was poor. Many left the boat and tried to make their way into England. They got left. We stuck to the ship and finally sailed on the 14th. We saw but one battleship on our trip across—a British cruiser about thirty miles out of New York.

"Our trunks and baggage are still in Paris. We were only permitted to take one hand grip with us and, as a result, we were forced to make the best of things during our twenty-day stay on the boat. When we will secure our trunks I do not know."
