

By MELLIFICIA. Wednesday, September 2, 1914.

MR. EDWARD B. PERKINS of New York City, formerly a member of The Bee staff, who was in Austria the night war was declared, has returned to New York. He vividly describes some gruesome happenings:

"Safely back in New York after many harrowing experiences in getting out of Austria and down to Italy. I was one of eight out of 1,400 Americans registered in Rome and Naples to secure passage on the steamship Taormina of the Lloyd Italiano line, sailing from Naples August 13. We had an eventful voyage across the Mediterranean and Atlantic, being stopped by British torpedo destroyers in the Straits of Gibraltar and again halted by a French battleship west of Portuguese coast, and we had a twenty-hour storm near the Azores. I lost my trunk at Budapest. In company with a Dr. J. B. Colefax from Calcutta, I reached Neusatz, a small Austrian town near the Serbian border and only forty miles from Belgrade. We visited the hospital camp and witnessed many gruesome spectacles. Several hundred dying and wounded from the battle of the Save bridge and skirmishes near Belgrade; surgeons working eight-hour shifts; priests hurrying about administering last rites. Also saw four of the Austrian aeroplane hangars and watched the huge battle airships load up with bomb projectiles and glide off in the direction of Serbia. We stayed at a church converted into a hotel, with nothing but horse meat and rye bread to eat. I was stopped as a suspect on several occasions and searched from head to foot.

"In Budapest on August 4 we saw two Slav reservists publicly shot down because they refused to join their regiment, which was about to leave for the Russian border. But every returning American will tell you of the privations and awful scenes of war."

WAR PRICES LESS IN EUROPE War to the Death on State Frontier Against Chicken

Products Bought in America Sold Cheaper in London Than Omaha.

MANIPULATORS ARE BLAMED

Control Outputs and Make Americans Bear the Brunt of the Barren to Meet Foreign Competition.

All the talk of European war raising prices in America will never again be believed by Al King, manager of the grocery department of Hayden Bros., who has long held that the war was little to blame for high prices, and that the high prices were due to manipulation by the fellows who have the stock monopolized. King had his faith in his own reasoning strengthened now with market quotations from London in the issue of "The People," published Sunday, August 30. The quotations given show that many of the products England buys from the United States are being sold cheaper in London than they are in Omaha for example.

England formerly received its sugar supply largely from Germany, and some from the United States. The war cut off its supply from Germany, and it bought a lot from the United States. Immediately sugar took an enormous jump in America until many grocery stores in Omaha are selling it at 8 1/2 cents a pound with none too much profit to themselves at that. This London paper quotes sugar at 7 1/2 cents, American money.

Lump sugar is quoted in London at 8 1/2 cents, while in Omaha people are paying 12 1/2 cents, "because there is war in Europe." Butter is quoted at 36 1/2 cents in London, while in Omaha, one of the greatest butter producing towns in the world, and not at war with anyone, consumers are paying 47 cents, or 1 1/2 cent more than in London.

Cheese is quoted in London at 19 cents, while in Omaha the same grade of cheese is sold at 22 cents. British bacon is quoted at 29 cents, while in Omaha people are paying from 30 to 35 cents.

Flour is quoted at 2 1/2 a hundred in London. In Omaha it is selling for 1 1/2 for a 45-pound sack, or, in round figures, 13.00 a hundred. Here is a difference of about three-quarters of a dollar between the price of flour in London and the price of flour in America, with the lower price obtaining in London, while much of this flour in London comes from the United States.

Wireless and other reports from the front, though closely censored, indicate that in Nebraska the war on prairie chickens, declared September 1, is attended with terrific slaughter. Such reports as filter through the censor show that the lines of the chickens have been broken in many places and that long before the end of the month the birds will have been practically driven from the state.

Ed Hennesey and Dan Geilus are just in from the country west and north of North Platte, into which they made a quick automobile trip, being on the ground to start the attack with the beginning of the open season. Although they were on the firing line less than three hours, they returned with the limit, reporting that the enemy was still in possession when they withdrew from the field.

President Mohler, getting a report that prairie chickens were invading the country along the Union Pacific line between Fallon and Northport, pressed Nels Updile into the service and with a full corps of camp followers, started out to check the invasion. They left for the scene of war in two cars, one for themselves and their soldiers and the other, in which was loaded their automobile, in which they will charge and attempt to rout the enemy.

The chickens are reported fat and in condition to carry on the struggle until the last one is killed.
