"Suityourself" is a Novel Add of the King-Peck Company

The puzzle editor, as well as thousands of the readers of The Bee had on their guessing caps all last week figuring out different angles found in a space that Friday developed into an artistic advertisement of the King-Peck Clothing company. Early in the week this enterprising company that believes in a liberal distribution of printers' ink to aid in making the business wheels turn, bought space in The Bee and therein inserted an advertisement that was more putaling than a Chinese puzzle.

The King-Peck Clothing company advertisement started with a lot of letters chopped up and then jumbled together. People said it was the work of some crazy man. The next day a couple of letters got around into shape and form and the next day two, or three more righted themselves. By Thursday the two words, "suit yourself," appeared as plain as print, Still, there was nothing to indicate where you could "suit yourself." Then the guessing commenced in ## University Debate.

"University debate," says M. Raymond, in "Arina Viruneque" (the deeds and the heroes), "and the 'System' of which it is during the last week. The taking of these a part, are now so thoroughly incorporated into the university's existence, and so effectively correlated with the other necessary features of its work, that it is natural, especially for those who are in a very potent sense little less graduates of the 'System' than of the university itself, to think of them as always having existed. So to think of them, he ever, is as great a mistake as to imagine them as having sprung like Athena, 'full armed from the heel of Zeus."

Before 1901, Mr. Raymond continues there had been at Nebraska little training in logical rhetoric, and the university's means of inducing close reasoning through classroom instruction were scanty in the extreme. Chancellor Andrews. realizing the need and appreciating the value of instruction along these lines called to the University Professor Miller M. Fogg, who since the autumn of 1901 has been at the head of this part of the university's activities. A thorough reor-

Method of Instruction.

"The most conspicuous difference, howver, between the new system and the old lack of system is a difference in method of instruction. Before the 'system' there was no instruction except for the necessarily insufficient assistance. gained from independent coaching. In 1901, howeven there occurred a radical One of the most interesting publications change, both in methods and in their that has ever come from the University application. The object of the new system was not to win debutes-was not even shaped toward the primary end of an appearance on the platform. Its primary object was the mastery of subject and thought training in the methods of scienmastery. The instrument for applying this method was and is the intercollegiate dehate seminary, or 'squad,' to which some sixteen men are elected through a general tryout. When inaugurated by Profersor Fogg the 'squad system' was a new departure west of the Mississippi. but since its adoption have been general throughout the west.
