TURN YOURSELVES AND LIVE YE

I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God; wherefore turn yourselves and live ye.—Ezekiel, xviii, 32.

Another drop in wheat prices. Now say it in flour.

We like winter better than summer because flies don't.

The man who put the cool in Coolidge will soon discover what hot stuff the president is made of.

The Irish election was a great success in spite of the fact that the number of injured was very small.

You can lead the democratic donkey to the presidential stream, but you can't make him "Ford" it.

When you invest in oil stock you probably are buying a hole in the ground which hasn't been dug yet.

Another reason why this is a free country is because intelligent people can't be forced to listen to radical oratory.

King Alfonso was a monarch from the moment of his birth. He is now as effective in ruling his country as he was at the start.

The dictatorship of the proletariat is as bad as the dictatorship of the bourgeois. Dictatorship is doomed, no matter who tries it.

Citizens of the United States may be divided into two classes—those who are paying for automobiles and those who are dodging them.

The chief objection to war is that it always produces a new crop of lip-warriors who were invisible in war and are invincible in peace.

It is remarked that if it was really true that people liked to work, we'd still be plowing the ground with sticks and transporting goods on our back.

A lot of people think they are democratic just because they have a grudge against people who are rich and people who amount to something.

Miss Peggy Wood suggests Will Rogers, the comedian, for president. The chairman now will entertain a motion that the nominations be closed.

The theatrical censors in Boston have approved Fatty Arbuckle's new vaudeville act. Which will confirm popular suspicions concerning the merit of Mr. Arbuckle's act.

When church members are ready to pay as much for religion as they pay for amusements, luxuries and unnecessary banquets, Christianity will add another chapter to its unfinished book.

The highest type of citizenship is not found in the man who works only one or two days a week at a big price, but in the man who finds something to do all the time that will either benefit himself or be of benefit to others.

A squirrel, reconnoitering for food, wandered into the capitol at Washington, became entangled in an electric fuse and broke up several miles of lightning circuits. If the squirrel was looking for nuts he should have waited until the convening of congress.

Over half a million people are drawing pensions from Uncle Sam and collecting a total of 254 million dollars a year. Most of them are living reminders of the war fought long before most of us were born. Fifty years from now, future editorial writers will be penning similar comment about the surviving veterans of the World War. The pensioner deserves all he gets and more.

A THOUGHT FOR TODAY

Too many parents treat their grown children as mere children and at the same time expect them to have mature judgment.

Nothing will save more fuel this winter than the price.

A European artist wants girls with soulful eyes. Everybody does.

It may not be Coolidge's fault but his dog don't hold the job as well as Laddie Boy did.

Two Monticello (N. Y.) 16-year-olds eloped, which leaves them a long time for arguing.

We can hardly wait for the newspapers these fall days to see who is shot or arrested.

Looks as if republicans will bet on democrats and vice versa in the next presidential election.

It's getting so when you hear a fire wagon you wonder what garage or filling station it is.

A Washington senator wants to tax those failing to vote. Senator, it is being done already.

This is the season of the year when the household should make a careful inspection of all flues, stoves and furnaces.

Winter is here. The birds are going south and the lawn mower and garden tools are coming back from the neighbors.

Here's a Canadian marrying a woman to keep her from testifying against him in a lawsuit. Many will not see exactly where he's ahead.

Why not do some of your Christmas shopping now? It would give more time to look about you, and it is economy to have plenty of time to shop as you wish.

Benjamin Franklin's picture will be on the new $100 bills. They should also be adorned with the observation that "A $100 bill saved is a $100 bill earned—twice."

Pennsylvania bans New England Christmas trees because she fears an invasion of the gypsy moth. Well, that will help starve off deforestation for another month or two.

Having failed to obtain his opinions on other important questions, the Washington correspondents ought to ask President Coolidge what he thinks of mayonnaise dressing.

Perhaps that Chicago man who had his ear bitten off by a friend will listen next time. After we have had to jerk our ears out of the mouth of some confidential whispering friend.

Senator Kellogg the new ambassador to London, is an authority on international law, but just what use he will find for that knowledge abroad is not clear. In Europe there is no international law.

It is hard enough for a man who has worked to put in a full day until he grows old. How much harder it must be for the aristocrats who come from Europe to buckle down to real work? But they do so, very much to their credit.

Senator Lodge told a Vermont audience that neither party contained a leader more fit to occupy the White House than the man who now occupies it. And there could be no fitter state than Vermont in which to make the statement.

It is doubtful whether the pre-nuptial intelligence test, urged by many sociologists, ever will be adopted by popular vote. Too many voters will oppose the suggestion of a young man to an intelligence test at the most disadvantageous moment in his career.

WOODROW WILSON

At frequent intervals the public is invited to read a chronological statement of the daily life of Woodrow Wilson. Inspired letters, evidently in a more advantageous position than their colleagues, are able to inform the public the exact hour of the rising and going to bed of Mr. Wilson; the exact moment he sits down to breakfast, when he opens his mail, when he dictates to his stenographer and when he rides in his automobile. No doubt such statements, though written for another purpose, cause Mr. Wilson to smile. He knows that no outsider knows anything about him or his habits.

It is recalled that when Mr. Wilson, retiring from the White House, announced that he would reside in Washington, his political enemies, fearing the power of the man, expressed belief that he had concluded to remain on the scene for purpose of picking out and exposing flaws in the administration of affairs by republicans; for the purpose of getting even with those political partisans who defeated his proposal in the League of Nations.

Likewise, it is recalled that some of his political friends entertained the same idea, and many nurtured the hope that he would continue to give battle to the end that those who had wrecked his international dreams might be brought to justice and held up to scorn and contempt.

It is not going too far to declare that Mr. Wilson was aware of the fear of his enemies and the hopes of his friends. It is evident that he concluded to surprise his enemies and disappoint his friends in order that he might become, with proper dignity, a private citizen, an observer of passing events from the sidelines.

Since the date of his retirement, many things have transpired which might have suggested to the former president an opportunity to belabor, to destroy his former opponents. There had never been a time in the life of this republic when ridicule might have been more effectively employed. But if tempted at all, Woodrow Wilson bade the devil get behind him.

There could not have been a more perfect example of how a former president should live, should conduct himself. He has never sought to interfere. No undertaking of the republican administration has failed because of a blow from Mr. Wilson. And when the former executive has desired to participate in some public event, as in the funeral of the "Unknown Soldier" and the funeral of the late President Harding, he has expressed his desire in language so courteous as to indicate that he sought a favor rather than a just due.

All that is known of Mr. Wilson is what is obvious. His hair is very white. His lameness still exists. His appearance moves alternately to enthusiastic applause—and tears.

Believe other reports if such belief make you happy. But there is no man in the United States who will publicly venture an assertion that Mr. Wilson favors this or that individual for the presidency. And no one knows to the moment the hour of his rising or retiring or whether he has his eggs fried or scrambled.

No one thought that he could do what he has succeeded in doing; that is, actually retire to private life. Perhaps he has not forgiven his enemies for the cruelty of their procedure against him. But his eyes were wet as he followed the lifeless body of his successor to its last resting place.

OUT WITH OPIUM

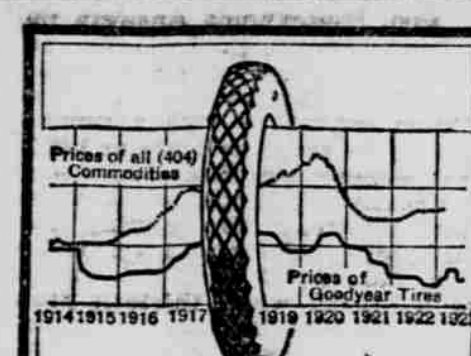

Persistence is not among the qualities lacking in the League of Nations. In its unspectacular way it is pursuing the opium evil, with the apparent intention of compelling every member nation to live up to its professed disapproval of the traffic.

Two conferences are desired by the assembly of the league, and both probably would be held in Washington. One is to bring together the representatives of powers having Far Eastern possessions and would discuss the suppression of opium smoking; the other has to do with the limitation of the use of manufactured drugs, such as morphine and cocaine.

Both are important but the first is the more interesting since it involves the direct action of the nations under whose protection, directly or indirectly, most of the world's supply of opium is either grown or marketed.

The League of Nations evidently intends to hang on to its mission and keep shoving the opium scandal into the faces of the powers until some sincere action is taken toward suppressing the traffic entirely. The world will wish it well in the task.

M'ADOO PUTS A DRY PLANK IN PLATFORM

Intimates that Efforts Made Thus For Enforcing the Dry Law Show Great Inefficiency.

New York, Oct. 28.—William Gibbs McAdoo, who is actively organizing his forces with a view to securing the democratic nomination for president, today came out flat-footedly for prohibition enforcement.

His emphatic words on the prohibition question followed those of Henry Ford, who said he would support President Coolidge in the next campaign if the president would enforce the prohibition laws.

Mr. McAdoo said he would like to see every resource of the government used to the utmost to wipe out the disgrace of prohibition violations. He intimated that the efforts so far made on the part of the government showed inefficiency.

Comparing enforcement of the 15th and 18th amendments, Mr. McAdoo said:

"I fear some people do not discriminate as regards the difference between the two amendments. The 15th does not carry with it the concurrent power clause, which as regards the 18th amendment makes it obligatory upon the states to adopt legislation so that state governments can co-operate with the federal government in enforcing the Volstead law."

"It is the duty of the state to see that the prohibition law is enforced just as much as it is the duty of the federal government to do so."

"The prohibition law, however, is a very recent law. The people of this generation adopted it. It fits into the scheme of things for the good of the country. Therefore, there is no reason why we should consider the liquor prohibition law in the same class as other prohibition laws."

"This law must be enforced as long as it is embodied in the constitution, and it is just as incumbent on the state governments to enforce it as it is upon the federal government."

Mr. McAdoo's wife, Eleanor Wilson McAdoo, and their two daughters, Ellen Wilson McAdoo, aged 8, and Mary Faith McAdoo, aged 9, and a young woman secretary, are traveling with him.

Mr. McAdoo will leave here tomorrow for Washington, where he
