 General Dawes, appointed ambassador to Great Britain, told the Washington reporters to go plumb to hell when they asked him if his baggage contained silk breeches for court work. That, he said, was his business.
THE TOLL THE WIND TAKES
 The United States of America, being a wide and broad country in which the winds have plenty of room to get up steam, pays an extremely high price for such meteorological disturbances as windstorms and tornadoes.
 According to figures compiled by the Travelers Insurance Co. of Hartford, Conn., tornadoes and windstorms in this country took nearly 2000 lives and caused property damage of approximately $50,000,000 in 1928.
 Oddly enough, the worst damage was done by disturbances that are classed as high winds instead of tornadoes. Windstorms took 1850 lives and caused $35,000,000 worth of damage, the rest being due to the more dreaded, but apparently less dangerous, tornadoes.
 These dangers, apparently, are more or less inescapable. No one so far has suggested any good tornado or wind preventive.

RELIGION AND SCIENCE
 An appeal that the beliefs of an old theology should be discarded from the Christian religion was made by the Rev. T. Rhonda Williams, in his address from the chair at the ninety-seventh annual assembly of the Congregational Union, held in the City Temple at New York recently.
 Two notable utterances which formed the keynote of the address, "Christian Belief in the Modern World," were:
 "It is the misfortune of the Church that the Creeds which still hold a formal place in most of them are, for the most part, impossible of belief to educated and intellectual men and women."
 "I think the Church has a great deal to learn from scientists in regard to reverence for truth."
 "We have got to realize," said Mr. Williams, "that our traditional doctrines concerning Jesus, hammered out as they were in the early councils of the Church, cannot be made current coin in the intellectual world of today."
 Official religion was practically using the dogmatic system of the pre-scientific world. It was using modes of thought and language that belonged to the time when the human race was considered to have originated in Adam and Eve 6,000 years ago, when the earth was the center of the universe and only recently created. This made it impossible for a large number of good and thoughtful people to attend the services of a church that continued to talk as if nothing had happened.
 "I believe," Mr. Williams declared, "that the present crisis in religion—and no thoughtful person can deny that there is a crisis—is due in part to the fact that thinking in connection with religion has never been thorough enough since the days of the Reformation. It is due to the further fact that even the best thinking which has been done has not been consistently recognized in the services of the Church."
 "If we take the Genesis account of Adam and Eve to be a legend, are we still to go on talking about the fall of man, without explaining that what we mean something different from what used to be meant by that phrase? I know that there is a real fall of man every day, and there was a terrific fall of man in 1914. I know that sin is a fact in human life and that we need to be saved from it, but this is not what used to be meant by the fall of man, and it would prevent confusion of thought to drop the phrase.
 "If we drop it, is no change to be made in that structure of the plan of salvation which we built up and founded upon the doctrine of the historic fall. Are we still to sing 'the second Adam to the fight and to the rescue came' when we no longer believe that the first Adam was there?
 "Why do we sing of the time 'When all was sin and shame'? There was never such a time. Humanity never has been entirely in bankruptcy of goodness, or we should have to confess that God was entirely out of His world.
 "The framework of the old theology has gone to pieces. I feel quite sure that, whatever the religion of the future will be, it will not be traditional Christianity. Indeed, traditional Christianity has already ceased to be the religion of a good many of our churches, and of a still larger number of our ministers. But one thing has not been plainly said and acknowledged, and our services have not been recast fully in the light of that fact.
 "In one of our favorite hymns, people sing: 'False and full of sin I am, I am all unrighteousness. Not a man or woman would say that of themselves if they were applying for a situation. Why do we say things about ourselves to God in one another's hearing which we do not believe and which are not true? To make such dogmas general adoption, or hymns for congregations to sing, lands us in absurd exaggerations and insincerities."
 There is no doubt that a great deal of preaching about sin and salvation today is utterly ineffective, largely because of the way in which these words suggested schemes of doctrine which are no longer believed, largely because of the way in which these words have been bandied about in the Church, especially in the rivalistic type of service. There was also the old conception of the Church as consisting of 'saved people,' always carrying with it the implication that those who were not in the Church were unsaved. This division between the Church and the world had made the words "saved" and "salvation" not only obnoxious to many people, but really confusing to their thought. It was a theory which has never been true to the facts. What was more, it could not be made to fit the facts.
