Ruth Elder says that since she is Mrs. Walter Camp, Jr., she wants us all to forget there ever was a Ruth Elder. Well, we've forgotten Marie Antoinette, Queen Elizabeth, Anna Hells, and a few others, and maybe it's just possible we can forget Ruth Elder.

LABOR DONE

A whippoorwill calling
As day softly goes;
The dew gently falling,
The breath of a rose,
The stars in their places
To welcome the moon,
The jingling of traces
Where star-dust is strewn;
The play in the shadows
Awaiting the sun.

White mists in the meadows
Where cool waters run,
Pale candlelight streaming
Across the wet grass,
From where, her eyes gleaming,
I see my dear lass
And hearken her humming
With lyrical mirth,
To welcome my coming
To heaven on earth.

—Edgar Daniel Kramer, in the Philadelphia Bulletin.

GOOD FOR YOU AND ME

A hat to suit a man has to be comfortable, but to suit a woman it has to make other women envious.
A lot of money spent in beauty parlors by some women is about as foolishly wasted as the money their husbands put on the "also rans."
Somehow or other we just can't picture a mother who smokes being careful of her youngsters like the old-fashioned one who'd comb Willie's head regularly with a fine tooth comb and wash his mouth out with soapy water when he'd used naughty words.

The only reasonable explanation of why some of the homely girls keep squinting into their mirrors is to see if some miracle hasn't happened to make them easier on the eyes since the last time they gave themselves the once-over.
Nothing has done more to boost the sale of cigarettes than women dread of being called old-fashioned and out of date.

Some people give us the impression that the biggest shock they could get would be to discover they actually are a lot of agreeable subjects to talk about.
Our guess is that if the girls really don't expect those cute under-things to be visible when they set down they wouldn't be so keen about having 'em of silk and in such dainty colors.

A back seat driver is what a man takes along to get him bawled up in emergencies and spoil all the pleasure of driving.
Times change, and while short skirts were making it perfectly proper for legs to be out in the open, the breakfast nooks were making it perfectly respectable to eat in the kitchen.

Back in the past—we cannot remember how far—alleged Soviet official documents got into print—we do not recall where or how—asserting or implying that Senators Borah and Norris had accepted bribes from Soviet government. Now these two Senators have various faults, one of which is their tenderness of heart and head toward the Moscow government; but we have never heard of anybody who supposed them capable of accepting bribes, or who regarded the documents in question as anything else than very clumsy and stupid forgeries.

In Berlin, not long since, a couple of scamps named Orloff and Pavlonowsky were convicted of peddling forged documents impugning the honor of the Idaho and Nebraska Senators. This brought the matter once again to public attention, but it would have been forgotten within a few days except for the insistence of Senator Borah that a full and uncensored report of the Berlin trial, as communicated to the state department by Ambassador Schurman, shall be given to the public.

A VETERAN'S MYSTERY

It would be interesting to know what the story was that George Marco, of Schneetady, N. Y., carried to his grave with him.
Marco recently died in his 80's. After his death it was discovered that he had been a Civil War veteran with a distinguished record—a fact that he had kept secret throughout his life. For 40 years he had a job in a Schneetady armory. He watched the soldiers march off to the war with Spain, and he watched them march off for the war with Germany; but he never revealed to any of them that he, too, had been a soldier.
Why did he keep that secret? Service in the Civil War is something that most men are highly proud of. What hidden reason made George Marco keep his war record secret throughout his life?

A scientist says the next war will be fought by radio, and it makes us tremble with horror to think of the carnage that will result when our American announcers begin their deadly work on the enemy's forces.

THE GOVERNMENT SIMPLIFIES FOREIGN LOANS

The billions of American money loaned to foreign governments and local interests therein has been more of concern to the national government than to our home financiers and money markets. What more interested Washington is the purpose to which these loans are put, and it has viewed with an unfriendly eye any loans to which suspicion attaches. Manifestly American money loaned to foreign governments that had not settled their war debt upon an understood basis, or where the use was for military purposes greatly concerned our government, and this unfriendliness had its effect upon the financiers. As it now looks a late statement from Washington is of interest, as this simplifies the situation. The purpose is not to frown upon these foreign loans, but to make it clear that the government is unfriendly to loans where the beneficiaries might use the funds to the disadvantage of any of our interests, for the adjustment of the French debt to us no longer makes it necessary to consider the factor of loans to countries that had not adjusted their war obligations, as there are now but two, Armenia owing us $14,000,000, and ussia $187,000,000.

A late Washington dispatch has the following bearing on the matter of American loans to foreign countries. This says in part as follows:
"The discussions which have been in progress in the state department and the other departments have involved the possibility of preventing countries which do not have balanced budgets and those which have defaulted in former foreign loans from securing loans in the American market. Officials of the department declined, however, to state whether this would be followed as a future policy."
The simplification of the present process by which the state department studies the loans would prevent in many cases, it is believed, considerable delay in the transmission of information and the passage of correspondence regarding the borrowings between the state, treasury and commerce departments. It is proposed to eliminate as much of this delay as is feasible and still maintain a scrutiny of foreign loans by the government with a view to protecting American investors.

The question of considering loans from the viewpoint of nations which have not funded their war debts with the United States, officials here pointed out, became unnecessary with the recent ratification by France of the Mellon-Berenger debt agreement—the last of the war debts which the United States expects, at least at present, to fund. The other outstanding obligations to the American government are an Armenian debt, estimated between $11,000,000 and $14,000,000, and the obligation of the provisional Russian government of $187,000,000.

MAN AGAINST WOMEN

In this month of September, 1929, the World's League for the Rights of Men will meet in the city of Vienna, to provide ways and means whereby the "tyranny of women" may be overthrown. It is declared that this "tyranny" now rules the world. No force is contemplated by the league; it expects to rely upon the power and virtue of moral suasion. The league also is disposed to be fair—it asks only for equal rights with women.
Twenty-five thousand members are said to be on the roster rolls of this enterprising organization in the interests of liberty, pure and undefiled. The list is said to include the names of many American business men, bankers, educators and other public leaders.
These masculine crusaders are to be admired for a degree of courage that is unusual. They risk the fury of women scorned and magnified—and very much in power; they risk being poisoned at breakfast and talked to death at night. Their task is comprehensive and onerous. Trying to convince a woman that she is a tyrant, politically, socially or economically, is something like trying to convince a bootlegger that he is not a decent citizen.

A BIT OF RED TAPE

Probably no government would be complete without red tape. Just the same, the rules and regulations that restrict government departments are sometimes highly puzzling.
The Navy Department would like to preserve Dewey's flagship, the Olympia, but it can't afford the money. Private citizens will have to raise the funds. Yet, the other day, when a rich easterner offered to donate the entire sum to the Navy Department, so that the old cruiser could be kept up forever without a cent of expense to the government, the offer had to be rejected.
Presumably the navy couldn't have accepted without violating some legal restriction or other. But the incident seems to us to reveal red tape at its worst.

IMAGINATION AND HUMAN BEINGS

Have you ever scanned the faces of men and women in perhaps widely different walks of life, and thought that with just a few changes in apparel it would be mighty difficult to ascertain which was which?

For instance, let us take a half dozen men, men who have succeeded in life as the world calls it, dressed as they are in the mode of 1929, and then range them alongside another half dozen their habiliments of daily wear. Naturally the superficial aspect appeals to the eye at once as defining their respective stations—the first half dozen bearing all the earmarks of wealth and what goes with it, their hands unaccustomed to daily toil even if in their earlier days they were in close touch with manual labor; the second group indicating unmistakably that in their daily occupation they were accustomed to dirt and grime.

But let us proceed with the experiment. We will have them exchange clothes with the temporary covering of what goes with their trade. It is more than likely that several of the business or professional men will easily pass for the wage earner division and the others stack up quite easily with their new environment. It is true that in certain cases features, bearing and manner will set off the individual, no matter under what circumstances you may find him, as different. In such cases clothes will not make for a final disposition. But in just so many others a casual look will fall to find any particular difference.
It brings us back to the old and widely quoted expression, "For the colonel's lady and Judy O'Grady are but sisters under the skin." The same comparison can just as well be applied to groups of women. Perhaps the foregoing may account for the many elopements of wealthy young women with their chauffeurs, and just as well to the fondness shown by many middle aged men for beautiful girls (without money) in stores, offices and on the stage.

Something will have to be done about this: Dr. E. E. Free, the scientist, says that so far as is known no woman has ever yet set foot in Antarctica.

The Island of Yap, with a quota of 100 immigrants to the United States hasn't sent in a single one. That's all right. This country has enough yaps already.
