THE COMING TARIFF

The country is getting the information regarding the newcoming tariff in articles and absorbing as they read. This is very likely getting them used to what is coming. The senate committee has made its report and that body is now busy talking matters over. As it now stands numerous provisions in the house bill have been changed with some lowered and others increased, but the general tendency seems to have been to cut down somewhat the grade of schedules. The changes are so many that the conference committee may have a long session discussing the differences and trying to reconcile them. One of the more prominent changes is that providing for a re-organization of the tariff commission.

There are to be six members of this commission and salaries of $12,000 each, which is three times that being received by the present commission. This provision also provides that the committee shall consist of three members of each political party, thus giving an equal show in the determining of rates that may be brought to the attention of the committee. It seems that the more material points of difference have been settled with the sugar duty below that as fixed by the house. Porto Rico also receives consideration as to coffee imports and exports, her sugar interests not being that of Cuba.

The country can not be said to have been over anxious about new tariff schedules. It has gotten used to the present rates, and as a fact, did not see any particular reason for a new tariff. There has been numerous protests received from foreign governments as to proposed higher duties, but our secretary of state says these are not protests, simply requests for information. It may as well go at that since any differing opinion will not count.

As there are many changes yet to be made the full extent of the change can not now be commented upon. It has to run the gauntlet of the senate, then again of the house and then by the conference committee, then back again to both houses for concurrence or disagreement. If the present tariff comes anywhere near public approval it ought to stand unmoored for the next dozen years. Too frequent tariff changes is not good for the country.

GOOD AND BAD LOBBYIST

The approaching senatorial investigation of Washington lobbies ought to be productive of a good deal of good; but, while it is going on, the general public ought to bear one or two facts in mind.

First of all, lobbying, in itself, is no crime. Any citizen has a right to go to Washington and intercede for or against any legislation whatever; and so has any organized group of citizens.

The thing that is wrong is for a lobbyist to misrepresent himself; to pretend that he is a disinterested patriot for instance, when he is really an agent for a firm of shipbuilders. That, together with the use of improper methods of persuasion, is the chief thing the public must guard against.

BOYHOOD SHRINES

You remember where we fished? Where the slender willows swished. Under the uncertain away Of your line that led away! Yesterday I sat and wished Time might bring us back the day.

You remember how the stream— Silver thread of boyhood dream— Stole away and through the wood. To the silent neighborhood; Even now the memories seem Just as happy and as good.

You recall the summer flowers— Idle days' meath blossomed bowers? How, with hook and line you sought "Oldest settlers" still un-caught? How the blessed lagging hours The noble art of patience taught.

You recall and cherish yet Days true men cannot forget? Days you trailed an aimless star Through the woods and wandered far— Days spent with the infinite That helped you be the man you are.

CUSTOMS CENSORSHIP

The Senate has voted to take away from customs authorities their power to censor books on the ground of obscenity. The fact is encouraging to all those who refuse to believe in the autocratic right of Government to trespass and invade individual, to deny to him the right to read and think, to deprive him of a personal judgment in matters cultural and educational.

A queer situation was created when an average customs official was given authority to refuse admittance into this country, for example, of Boccaccio, Voltaire, many of the classics and books which for centuries had been recognized by the cultured world as part of the helpful intellectual progress of literature in developing the mental consciousness of the race—the ruling, dominant class of the race!

Carried to its logical conclusion, no Bible could demand admittance here, no Shakespeare, no Fielding and Smollett, no accurate portrayal of the times of Elizabeth, no unexpurgated Gulliver, and the illogic of the situation was emphasized by the fact that all the time there has been here evident a flood of current books open to any and every objection that could possibly be made to many of the workers, the wise and virtuous customs censors turned away for the good of our souls—really suggestive, nasty, stupid books.

But the great trouble was that it ever could have been considered that Congress and customs had a right to decide what books the public may be permitted to read. As a distinguished contemporary has said, "Censorship in any hands is a smug assumption. It may be a necessary feature of child training. But the American people are not children."

SHAW ON EDUCATION

Bernard Shaw is a sort of licensed jester, and the public, admiring his genius, forgives him many perverse paradoxes. But there is a limit to clowning even by a genius.

Mr. Shaw professes to believe that the great British universities and preparatory schools are "destroying civilization" by the kind of education they offer. He would raise them. He does not explain what sort of education he would substitute for the type he condemns so sweepingly.

However, a few days ago he declared that Russia was the only country that was endeavoring in the right way to teach citizenship and build civic character. Presumably Mr. Shaw favors British emulation of Soviet Russia.

But how does the soviet regime build character? By suppressing freedom of discussion and criticism, by teaching nothing but the economic and political doctrines of Marx and Lenin and by converting all schools and colleges into propaganda mills.

What would be socialist Shaw say if a "capitalistic" society adopted that policy and prohibited the study or even the reading of all radical books, magazines and newspapers in or out of school and college? The answer hardly admits of doubt: Shaw would heap scorn and indignation upon such intellectual and moral tyranny.

Talk of the destruction of originality and independence by the schools and colleges is mostly moonshine. The small amount of truth in it—and of course there is danger of routine and traditionalism—is buried under a mountain of rhetorical twaddle and exaggeration.

We can not help but marvel at this man who went through so much pain to have his jaw restored. May he live to be a hundred.

A speaker before the Institute of politics at Williamstown, Mass., said our provincialism was one of the obstacles to the proposed international bank in connection with the German reparations matter. However, our provincialism is a pretty good thing to dig into for European loans.

Ambassador Dawes tells Hugh Gibson that naval parity is best brought about by measuring equality by a totality of considerations and equipment. He thinks parity by tonnage and classes will not succeed as may the other.

Railroad robberies are decreasing a reduction of 93 per cent being reported for the past ten years. We still have many more than we want.

THE REBELLIOUS WEST

For a third time the coalition in the United States Senate has voted for the debenture plan, notwithstanding Mr. Hoover's declaration that the debenture would "bring disaster to the farmer."

The House, of course, will have to concur in the debenture before that plan can go to the President, and it has up to this time refused to do so. Nor is this the only provision put into the tariff bill by the Senate against the expressed wishes of Mr. Hoover. He wanted also to give the President the right to lower or raise tariff rates, a power which the Senate has reserved to Congress. So that even if the Senate recedes from one provision in conference with the House there will still be reason to suppose that Mr. Hoover will veto the bill. It is unlikely that the Senate will recede from both positions.

It will surprise a good many observers in Washington if this does not make any tariff bill impossible. The West is in rebellion, and the breach between agriculture and industry has so far opened that it can hardly be bridged. The acquiescence of all the great grain states in a tariff system which has so steadily impoverished the farmer as it has enriched the industrialist, has been one of the phenomena of American politics. Notwithstanding it was quite obvious as far back as the time of McKinley that the tariff was an industrial subsidy which had the effect of increasing everything the farmer bought without any corresponding increase in anything he sold, the great agricultural states have regularly stepped to the polls every four years and cast their vote for this iniquity. It is a turning point in American politics that sees this whole disillusioned region demanding for agriculture a subsidy that is at least to some degree comparable to the subsidy enjoyed by manufacturing. It is not possible to say that the debenture would be anything else. The only possible justification for taking money out of the United States Treasury and handing it to the farmers in this direct fashion is that by the same indirection the Government does it for manufacturing.

The West will hardly get what it wants. It probably will prevent any tariff revision at all. Meanwhile, the country may be sure that the def of the West is as plain as it is significant of our changing times. That declaration is: If the farmer cannot have a subsidy nobody can have one.
