The outstanding in American business is steadiness. The good and bad "cycles" of old have largely disappeared, and even seasonal fluctuation are comparatively light. The foresight of both producer and consumer contributes to these more satisfactory conditions.

THE SUN

Sun is an Artist
When he gets him up;
Sun is an Artist
When he goes to sup;
But Sun is no Artist
When he rides high;
He is an Anarchist,
Bombing earth and sky.

When he is an Artist,
He purples the hill,
And sprinkles gold dust
On the brown mill;
He makes each grass-blade
A lance of gold,
And splashes the sky
In masses bold.

But when he is an Anarchist
He strips the earth bare,
And shows in its nakedness
Whatever is there.

—Elliot Kays Stone in the New York Times.

THE YOUNG CHILD'S RIGHT

President Hoover has to his credit impressive achievements in numerous fields of endeavor, but none of them should more lastingly contribute to his fame as a statesman of foresight and proper human emotions than his inaugural and sponsorship of the movement on child health and protection. In this work the Secretary of the Interior is bending his every energy to base the national program on sound scientific facts.

The White House Conference called by President Hoover is the third of its kind, and is designed to be productive of concrete achievement to complement and complete the work in this direction that was essayed by Former Presidents Roosevelt and Wilson. As has been well said, this third conference is directed toward the actual realization of the child's Bill of Rights which President Hoover wrote when President of the American Child Health Association.

"The ideal to which we should strive is that there shall be no child in America that has not been born under proper conditions; that does not live in hygienic surroundings; that ever suffers undernourishment; that does not have prompt and efficient medical attention and inspection; that does not receive primary instruction in the elements of hygiene and good health; that has not the complete birthright of a sound mind in a sound body; that has not the encouragement to express in fullest measure the spirit within, which is the final endowment of every human being."

This Bill of Rights, more fully realized, would give to America the future greatest citizenry of the earth. To approximate this realization the full resources of the Government are to be employed, as Secretary Wilbur has said, to the end that a new type of procedure may be discovered by which all necessary data may be secured and the great work of child health, protection and conservation carried forward to definite completion.

ASSASSINATING THE U. S. CONSTITUTION

The Indianapolis News, one of the strongest newspapers in the Middle West, and long a supporter of national prohibition, has changed its mind about it.

Testifying before the House Judiciary Committee last week, C. P. Connolly, a writer, said that the metropolitan newspapers of the United States are dropping poison into the breakfast cups of the people. As a matter of fact the metropolitan papers of the United States, or almost all of them, are trying to save the American Constitution. That freedom which a metropolitan environment enables them to enjoy if they will is sufficiently clear-eyed and undisturbed by public clamor to see in national prohibition a peril to our form of government and ruin to the great foundation upon which it rests.

Except for the metropolitan newspapers there would by this time be left little or nothing of the Constitution of which Gladstone said that it is "the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain or purpose of man;" of which Bryce wrote: "It ranks above every other written constitution for the intrinsic excellence of its scheme, its adaptation to the circumstances of the people, the simplicity, brevity and its precision of its language, its judicious mixture of definiteness in principle with elasticity in detail;" which De Toqueville called "the most perfect Federal constitution that ever existed;" and of which the historian Fiske said that it was made by a group of men "containing among themselves a greater amount of political sagacity than he'd ever before been brought within the walls of a single room."

After visiting for 10 years the troubled scene induced by prohibition, the News concludes that we are "assassinating" the Constitution. Notwithstanding its long championship of national prohibition, the Indianapolis paper cannot agree that any objective is worth so great a sacrifice. It therefore abandons its support of "the noble experiment," and announces that so far as it is concerned the experiment is a failure. What we are doing, it says, is to change the nature of the Constitution. It reminds us that the Constitution was designed to be nothing more than the framework of government, and asserts that we are converting it into a bundle of statutes—a moral code. "The founders of the Republic," says the News, "realized that only the most general rules could be applied to a territory as extended as our territory even then was, and to a people that differed widely among themselves in many important particulars. But now we are not only legislating in the Constitution—which in itself is a mistake and a very serious one—but legislating in regard to matters which the fathers would have left, and meant to be left, to the people in their local communities, and for a country vastly more extended than the fathers ever dreamed it would be, and for a vastly more diverse population."

It was inevitable that the issue as to national prohibition should resolve itself into a fight for and against the American Constitution. Many of the metropolitan newspapers, including the Post-Dispatch, have foreseen that this is what the issue would come to. Even before the Federal judiciary lifted its voice against violating the constitutional rights of the people to enforce national prohibition, and when the United States Supreme Court had failed to do so, the metropolitan newspapers had protested against what Justice Brandeis has characterized as outlawry upon the part of the Government itself. The News has allied itself with this school of thought. It therefore says that "the question raised by the eighteenth amendment is not one of liquor or no liquor," which is an incident. It is a question of "what can be put in the Constitution without impairing its force, changing its character and ultimately destroying it as a constitution."

That is the point. How long is it going to be until influential newspapers like the Detroit News, the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, the Atlanta Constitution, the Memphis Commercial-Appeal, the Dallas News, the Kansas City Star, the Louisville Courier-Journal and the Houston Post-Dispatch, also admit it?—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A Chicago paper is responsible for this one: "An English woman who had not spoken a word for ten years broke the silence the other day, and explained why she had kept still. She had repeated scandal about a young woman, and the girl, hearing of it, had committed suicide. The tale-teller, horrified at what she had done, sentenced herself to silence for a decade. That woman should have a statue."

AMERICANIZATION OF MEXICO

Americans who have lamented Mexico's seemingly stubborn resistance to the process of Americanization need lament no longer. The ice has been broken, and the indifference and the hostility to Americans so long noted below the Rio Grande will quickly melt away, if history repeats itself.

The first evidence that Mexico is yielding to the gospel of the hundred per centers is the recall from Moscow of the Mexican envoy as a protest against community demonstration before the Mexican embassies in Washington, Buenos Aires and Rio Janeiro. No red-frenzied Washington politician could have better executed that gesture, so typically Americanism. This tracing of labor troubles and fanatical demonstrations to the soviet is reminiscent of the post-war days when great fear was exercised by certain public men over the possibility of the red flag being run up over the White House. The suspicion that all critics of an old established government are clandestine recipients of bolshevik gold is a characteristic of the prevailing spirit in some quarters.

Mexico has leaped the breach. What next? Government by commission, bureaucratic government, morality by legislation?

ONE THIMBLEFUL - A DAY'S FEED FOR ONE CHICK!

THINK OF IT! One tiny thimbleful... all the feed a chick can put in its little crop in one day. On this tiny bit it must live... grow... build bones... build muscles... start feathers. Think of the job feed has to do!

They must depend on feed for so many things! They get them all in Purina Chick Starters (mash) or Purina All-Mash Starters Chow... 12 different ingredients in every thimbleful. Cod-liver oil... dried buttermilk... alfalfa flour... granulated meat... these and eight others are there!

These 12 ingredients... think how carefully they must be mixed to make every thimbleful alike. Purina Starters and All-Mash Starters Chow are mixed over and over again... 960 times just to be thorough! You will find the same care taken with Baby Chick Chow (scratch)... to be fed with Starters until your chicks are six weeks old... and with Purina Growena (mash) and Purina Intermediate Hen Chow (scratch)... to be fed from then on until the pullets are laying at 16 weeks.

How little feed a chick eats... just one thimbleful a day... yet how important it is... how much depends on it... the chick's very life... its growth... what the pullets will do for you next fall and winter when eggs are sure to be worth good money. You can afford to feed only the best... Purina Poultry Chows.
