One can't buy experience below par, yet it rarely pays dividends.

People who live in glass houses probably know how a goldfish feels.

Although the Illinois campaign was fiery, it was far from Ruth-less.

Al Capone would settle down to the quiet life (but the racket won't let him).

When out of breath you catch it quicker by standing still than by running after it.

Experience is a pretty dear teacher—when it comes in that form of a pretty schoolma'am.

Estimators say that people of Hungary wore out 7,000,000 pairs of boots and shoes last year.

Freedom: An imaginary state enjoyed by those who are too busy to be conscious of their chains.

It's always bad news to her corset to hear a woman say she is going out to buy a new pair of shoes.

If you doubt that art plays a part in American's lives look at the crowd gathered to watch a billboard painter.

Next to a kitchen faucet, nothing can possibly leak as much as too much mustard in a hot-dog sandwich.

Government statisticians are not to be confused by the fact that the Pullman Company has lowered its berth rate.

A doctor predicts that in 50 years all men will be bald. But they will still be buying hair tonic from bald-headed barbers.

And we don't think a man's head feels so doggone elated to hear him announce he is going out to buy a derby hat either.

Detroit pays a man a salary to "look dumb." Most cities, controlled by political parties, pay a lot of dumb-bells to look wise.

Now and then may be found a person who reads all the press reports about the naval parley at London, but he can't tell you what it is all about.

President Hoover says he is standing squarely behind the American delegation to the London naval parley, which would be interesting if anybody happened to know just where the American delegation is standing.

America's so-called lawlessness may be blamed on everything except a scarcity of laws.

Why, when one considers the chances it takes in this age, does a chicken cross the street.

The patient seldom knows any more about the dope the doctor gives him than the doctor does.

One reason why prohibition is not enforced is that the law of supply and demand has not yet been repealed.

Since gentlemen prefer them, we take it that the only blackheads that worry the blondes are those that mar their faces.

One of the beautiful things about living in Venice at this time of the year is that they can't begin to tear up the streets.

The coming of the bridal season didn't mean the factories had to work in day and night shifts turning out can openers.

The average householder probably is glad when the census taker departs without asking about the family supply of home brew.

A new type of ladies hand bag is shaped like a mail bag. The reason perhaps is that it usually contains collections of the males.

"A man should be master in his own home or know the reason why," says an exchange. Usually it doesn't take him long to find the reason why.

An automobile racer in England admitted he often fell asleep with the steering wheel at his hands. This illustrates the power of mind over motor.

A Georgia man bet $10 he could drink a quart of whisky at one sitting, and he did. However, the $10 defrayed only a small part of his funeral expenses.

France is a resourceful nation. When a cabinet breaks down, which happens often, she always has spare parts at hand with which to make necessary repairs.

A man was found roaming thru the streets of Washington the other day who couldn't tell his name, the place he lives, or even the commission he belonged to.

Russia sets a precedent in adding a Department of Physical Culture to its Cabinet. No other country could get a Minister to arise at dawn and talk over the radio.

HOOVER AND HUSTON

Herbert Hoover has a political boss on his hands and does not know how to get rid of him.
Two weeks ago the President weakly intimidated Claudius Huston, chairman of the Republican executive committee, that his room was preferred to his company; that it would be better if Mr. Huston would retire and let somebody else be chosen as his successor.

Not a direct request, of course, nor yet a plain intimation. The suggestion was conveyed second-handed, and not in the form of an express demand for retirement.

Herbert Hoover, it seems, does not transact official or political business that way. He invariably follows the line of least resistance. He has never been known to say, "Here's your hat; what's your hurry?"

Nevertheless Mr. Hoover seems to be genuinely disturbed over the situation since Claudius Huston has failed to take a covert hint. He disrelishes enormously the idea of having Huston as the head of the Republican national executive committee. In his secret heart of hearts, he would like to have a second term as President and Huston is a veritable "old man of the sea" around his neck.

But Hoover likes to have somebody else to do the dirty work for his administration. He has sought to obtain Huston's departure from political life without openly appearing in the transaction. He calls to the White House at frequent intervals Republican national committeemen from the various states and privately suggests to them that Huston ought to be fired. But the committeemen, it seems, pay no more attention to the suggestion than they did to a request from the same source that Perry W. Howard, the negro committeeman from Mississippi, be displaced.

The bosses of the G. O. P., it would seem, are not in a displacing mood these days. Howard hangs on and likewise Huston—but for different reasons.
Hoover will have to stand sponsor for Huston. The Tennesseean is not popular with members of the Republican national executive committee. He was thrust upon the old-timers as Mr. Hoover's man for the place when they plainly did not want him, and it is evidently their determination to give Hoover "a whole bellyful of Huston."

This is one time, unless a remarkable change develops in the situation, where the President cannot shift a responsibility when it grows painful. He contrived a wretched leadership for his party, and the Old Guard is determined to give him a full measure of punishment.
The greatest need of the nation today is a man in the White House with the courage of his convictions—a man with the rigid backbone of Cleveland, Roosevelt, or Wilson.

Herbert Hoover has no more backbone than a skinned banana.
SOUTH DAKOTA'S PRIMARY EXPERIMENT
Like all remedies for political ills, the popular primary is something short of a panacea. It has advantages. There can be no question that the personnel of the United States Senate has improved under the popular primary. How far this is true in the scale of public officials is a problem.

South Dakota is one of our best laboratories for determining such things. She is willing to try almost anything once. Now she is trying a combination of the primary and convention systems. The direct primary is retained in South Dakota for the nomination of United States Senator, Representatives in Congress, Governor, members of the Legislature, and county offices. It also serves for the election of State and precinct committeemen, and delegates to State and National conventions. All other elective State officers—Lieutenant-Governor, Attorney-General, Secretary of State, Auditor, Treasurer, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Commissioner of Schools and Public Lands, Railroad Commissioner and presidential electors, are to be nominated by State convention held after the primary. This State convention also elects the party State chairmen and the members of the national committee, as well as adopting the party platform. Judges have for some time been nominated at separate non-partisan primaries, and the present law makes no change in respect to them.

Thus South Dakota is for the moment experimenting with a modification of the short ballot. South Dakota may be flat, but she is never dull.
The fraction of a person noted in the rating of automobiles to population may be the portion left after one is hit by a speeder.

A JUDGE'S VIEW OF "SATYRICON"

Some anonymous snooper had Gerald Nedwich, Chicago bookseller, haled into court for selling Petronius' "Satyricon," the charge being that the book is obscene. Petronius was a favorite of Nero, who was Emperor of Rome from 54 to 68 A. D., and was known as the arbiter elegantiarum, or the Ward McAllister of Nero's court. "Satyriconus," has graduated long since into that Valhalla of literature ineptly called "the classic." It is of immense value to historians because it preserves the dialect of the Roman plebeians, or lower classes.

Of its value to smut-seekers we submit the opinion of the magistrate before whom Bookseller Nedwich was brought:

"It is tiresome to read, but having read it, I discharge the defendant."

That is a fitting rebuke to the snooper, as well as a guarantee that "Satyricon" will not become a best seller. As a matter of fact, a good many of the classics designed by customs officers and other guardians of our morals as obscene are of interest only to scholars, a fact which in itself exposes the smut-hounds to the ridicule they deserve.

OUR NEW PARTY

We hereby propose the formation of a new party in Nebraska.

Forget all about Democrats and Republicans, tariffs and disarmaments, world courts, Herbert Hoover and Al Smith.

Dismiss from your mind all factions, all partisan strife, all petty hatreds now prevailing in Nebraska. Thrust aside, if need be, requisite qualifications for citizenship, payment of poll taxes, and all that sort of thing.

You are hereby made eligible to membership in our new party if you can answer affirmatively this question: "Have you paid your grocery bill?"
All kinds of business stationery printed at the Journal office.
