Efforts Fail Because United States Has No National Policy, He Says

San Francisco, Cal., June 19 .-Owen D. Young, financier and author of the Young reparations plan, addressing members of the National Electric Light association in convention here tonight, said the United States must develop a consistent national policy, including cultivation of foreign markets, if it is to solve the problem of farm relief.

Young's speech, broadcast over a national hookup, dealt with the whole problem of America's surplus in the world economic scheme. It touched upon the tariff, business depresion, unemployment and other national problems and urged inclusion of a co-operative spirit in in-ternational affairs as a relief for them.

"The farm surplus," Young said, 'is the most serious problem. Industrial overproduction and the sur-Census Bureau Finds Fifteen Per plus of raw materials are also important.
