MR. DAWES DISAPPOINTS

When Ambassador Dawes, sailed for England after a two weeks visit to this country, failed to meet expectation during his stay here. To begin with, rumor had it that the purpose of the trip was to hand his resignation to Mr. Hoover. This did not happen. Then it was said Mr. Dawes was on his way to Chicago to clean up the crime situation there. He did not do this, either. A more whimsical report was to the effect that Mr. Dawes disliked English barbers and was rushing to Chicago to get a proper haircut. He was too busy in Chicago to get a haircut, however, and denied he had cabled ahead for barber reservations. Otherwise one thought Mr. Dawes was in this country to put the naval treaty through Congress. He didn't get around to this, either. Some earnest souls remembered that on leaving office he said he would keep on fighting to reform the Senate rules, and expected him to take up this campaign again. But he didn't even mention the subject. About all he would discuss was the 1933 Chicago world's fair and a new type of collar he had adopted. What's become of "Helen Maria" Dawes, anyhow?

It is natural that President Hoover should take great pains in the choice of the personnel of this group. His sincerity and confidence in demanding the flexibility feature tend to make him solely responsible for the success or failure of the reorganized body for "scientific" tariff-making. His appointments will be watched with the keenest interest, therefore, not only by business groups which have an immediate interest in tariff changes, but also by those individuals who want to see just what the Engineer-President can do with a rate-making system that has virtually failed under two previous Presidents.

The movement to make Robert H. Lucas, Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington and former Collector of Internal Revenue in Kentucky, the actual head of the Republican campaign this year seems in a fair way of succeeding, and directs attention to the fact that the Democratic campaign, for some time, has been under the direction of Jouett Shouse, ex-Congressman from Kansas, who spent most of his boyhood and young manhood in Kentucky, marrying a Kansas girl and going to the Kansas State Senate and thence to Congress before he became Assistant Secretary of the Treasury under William G. McAduf.

Like Shouse, Lucas is intensely "regular" in his politics. Beaten for the Republican nomination for Governor in 1927 by Judge Flem D. Sampson, mostly on the issue of mutual betting at race tracks, Lucas proved himself such a game "sport" politically by his support of Sampson in the election that when the time came to fill a vacancy in the office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington, Kentucky Republicans united in recommending him for the post. Shouse was an earnest supporter of McAduf for President, and as State Senator and Congressman had a "dry" record, and yet he stood by the Democratic nominee for President in 1928, and in that campaign won the high regard of Democratic leaders for his ability and loyalty.

Both Lucas and Shouse will have the active and loyal backing of their respective party leaders in Kentucky in the campaign this fall for seats in the Congress and the toga of a United States Senator. Normally Democratic, Kentucky has been going Republican too often for comfort to the Democrats. On past performance, the Democrats seem to have the best of it this year, but one never can tell. If, for any reason, the Democrats should fail to get out

NOTICE OF SUIT

In the District Court of the County of Cass, Nebraska.

You are further notified that you are required to answer said petition on or before Monday, August 25, 1930, or your default will be entered and decree rendered in accordance with the prayer of said petition. Of all of which you will take due notice.

CLARA JONES, Plaintiff. W. A. Robertson, Attorney for Plaintiff. j14-4w

FLEXING THE TARIFF

No sooner was the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill passed by the Congress and signed by the President than projects for its alteration were made in Congress and out. However bad some provisions of the bill might be, it is widely pointed out, there remains the flexible feature, by which the Tariff Commission and the President can change by 50 per cent the rates established in the Act of 1930. Under the terms of the Act, Mr. Hoover has 90 days in which to choose a new Commission, upon which will rest the responsibility for investigating proposed rate changes and recommending action by the President on them.

The sad experience we have had with Tariff Commissions leaves little hope that Mr. Hoover's Commission will be of any great help. Even though the new appointees should be free from partisan bias and free from economic influences which might prejudice them, there are still the slowness of investigations and the uncertainty of reaching accurate conclusions. It is an extremely challenging problem, and to a considerable extent the prestige of the Hoover Administration depends on the work of this Commission about to be appointed.

It is natural that President Hoover should take great pains in the choice of the personnel of this group. His sincerity and confidence in demanding the flexibility feature tend to make him solely responsible for the success or failure of the reorganized body for "scientific" tariff-making. His appointments will be watched with the keenest interest, therefore, not only by business groups which have an immediate interest in tariff changes, but also by those individuals who want to see just what the Engineer-President can do with a rate-making system that has virtually failed under two previous Presidents.

KENTUCKY IN THE LIMELIGHT

The movement to make Robert H. Lucas, Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington and former Collector of Internal Revenue in Kentucky, the actual head of the Republican campaign this year seems in a fair way of succeeding, and directs attention to the fact that the Democratic campaign, for some time, has been under the direction of Jouett Shouse, ex-Congressman from Kansas, who spent most of his boyhood and young manhood in Kentucky, marrying a Kansas girl and going to the Kansas State Senate and thence to Congress before he became Assistant Secretary of the Treasury under William G. McAduf.

Like Shouse, Lucas is intensely "regular" in his politics. Beaten for the Republican nomination for Governor in 1927 by Judge Flem D. Sampson, mostly on the issue of mutual betting at race tracks, Lucas proved himself such a game "sport" politically by his support of Sampson in the election that when the time came to fill a vacancy in the office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington, Kentucky Republicans united in recommending him for the post. Shouse was an earnest supporter of McAduf for President, and as State Senator and Congressman had a "dry" record, and yet he stood by the Democratic nominee for President in 1928, and in that campaign won the high regard of Democratic leaders for his ability and loyalty.

Both Lucas and Shouse will have the active and loyal backing of their respective party leaders in Kentucky in the campaign this fall for seats in the Congress and the toga of a United States Senator. Normally Democratic, Kentucky has been going Republican too often for comfort to the Democrats. On past performance, the Democrats seem to have the best of it this year, but one never can tell. If, for any reason, the Democrats should fail to get out their vote, as has happened in that state, and the Republicans register their full strength, anything may happen.

Senator Hi Johnson would have a heck of a time trying to convince anybody that he is moved by purely patriotic motives, and not by personal spite, to take the attitude toward the peace treaty he has. "Oh, Would Some The Gift to Gee Us."

If there were no suckers a lot of those who are now riding in limousines would be using the street car.

NEW POWER from OLD MOTORS more power from new motors

Old, worn, carbon-crusted motors are taking hills more easily and new motors are showing an amazing liveliness and power response everywhere in Nebraska.

"A DISTINCTLY FINER GASOLINE"

The explanation is new Red Crown Ethyl—the motor fuel that eliminates hesitating starts and gas knocks—that enables any motor to pull through loose sand or heavy mud, to climb steep grades with less gear shifting than ever before.

Try this distinctly finer gasoline and see. Check up the gas cost per mile. You'll find new Red Crown Ethyl is economical in truck, tractor and passenger car—in old motors and in new high-compression motors. New Red Crown Ethyl is a luxury but not an extravagance.
