Growth High in Our Population Last Ten Years

Continental United States Has 122,728,873 People in Its Borders According to Report.

Washington—The population of continental United States on the basis of official preliminary census figures is 122,728,873. This figure was compiled Tuesday night from official announcements given press bureaus by census supervisors in the various states after completing the enumeration which began April 2.

Only one district in the United States—Clearfield county, Pennsylvania—was incomplete, but a preliminary estimate Tuesday night by the census supervisor placed its population at 1,319.

The total figure for the United States population is, however, subject to revision in the census bureau's official announcement, which is not expected for another week or more.

Territories of the United States and outlying possessions, not included in the continental United States total, bring the nation's grand total of population to 137,501,561. This figure includes an estimate for the Philippine islands whose census is controlled by the insular government, which has not made an enumeration for several years.

Growth in Ten Years.
Continental United States had 105,710,620 people ten years ago, while the nation with its outlying possessions totaled 117,859,395.

The country has had the largest numerical increase for continental United States in its history during the last ten years, despite restricted immigration and a declining birth rate. There was an increase of 17,018,253 people in the decade, compared with the previous record increase for a ten year period of 15,977,691, made between 1900 and 1910.

In rate of growth, the last decade made a better showing than that which ended in 1920. The increase was 16.1 per cent, compared with 14.9 per cent from 1910 to 1920, and 21 per cent per cent from 1900 to 1910.

California had the largest rate of growth of any state, but was exceeded by New York in numerical increase. California's rate of growth was 64.6 per cent and her numerical increase was 2,224,328.

Florida, second to California in increase percentage, rated a 51.4 per cent growth. New Jersey, third in increase rate, added 26.8 per cent, a numerical gain of 846,668.

Decrease in Montana.
Montana was the only state to show a decrease, 2.8 per cent loss, the numerical decline being 15,370. In the 1920 census, twelve states, Mississippi, Vermont and Nevada, showed decreases in population. Arizona had the largest increase of that census, with 63.5 per cent gain, while Montana, second in line, had an increase of 46 per cent.

New York, for more than a century leader of all the states in population, held her place, gaining by way of census increase but not being displaced. Nevada completed a half century in final place.

Recalls Visit to Indiana.

Uncle J. W. Berger, one of the oldest citizens of Murray, and who has been here for a long time, coming in 1858, which is seventy-two years ago, while speaking with a representative of the Journal recalled a visit which he and the father, Enos Berger and family made from Winterset, Iowa, to northern Indiana, in the summer of 1948, which is eighty-two years ago.

Mr. Berger recalls that his father had an opportunity to secure an old spring wagon, which was very dilapidated and taking the Irons portions supplied the wood and made a new spring wagon. Then during the early summer departed for their old time home. Mr. J. W. Berger being but two years of age. However he retained a vivid recollection of the trip and the visit.

He recalls the pointing out of Lake Michigan by the father, and many other instances. One was that the father said when we got to uncles place you will see him sitting on the fence in front of the house eating an apple.

Sure enough when they arrived, there sat uncle on the fence eating an apple. The summer was much like the present one, turning dry during the summer and staying dry until the fall. As they came back they found it difficult to obtain water to drink and for the horses. They came to a farm and saw a well along the fence near a house and the father, Enos Berger, stopped and going to the well was going to draw a bucket of water that the kiddies might have a drink, but the man of the house came out and ordered them to come on and not take any water, notwithstanding they were nearly famished.

They however, got water about a mile further on. Ten years afterwards in 1858 they came to Nebraska and crossed the Missouri river at Rock Bluffs and the first night they were here there was a heavy rain which covered the entire bottoms of Rock Creek at Rock Bluffs, and an instance which Mr. Berger never forgot, during the seventy-two years he has lived here.
