The Air Pilot's New Year's Visit

Mary Graham Bonner

MARGARET CARY was very beautiful. She had pink cheeks and blue-gray eyes and soft brown hair. Her arms were so dainty, and her throat was soft and white and looked as though it should be a subject for the poets or the painters or the sculptors. And her hands were small and graceful.

She was very fond of John Robinson—but not any fonder of him than John Robinson was of her. He was an air mail pilot, and in all sorts of weather he flew with the mail. He always made light of everything, but from others she had heard how brave he was, how marvelously he managed his plane in any kind of a storm, how he always thought of others.

But none of this John Robinson told to Margaret Cary. He only told her that all that he did was a matter of routine, his work. She did not live near where he flew his route, but was hoping to see him. He had not been able to get to her for Christmas. He had been too busy—too busy thinking of others. And in a way it had hurt her feelings. She had felt that he should have come to her—she who could command so many could not command him. And now it was storming so hard perhaps he would not be able to make the trip to see her for New Year's. But if he didn't come she would never feel the same toward him. It was unreasonable she knew. But she cared for him—more than for any of the others, and the others looked to her house and he had not come. And there was doubt that he would come. Then he arrived. She heard the humming of the plane; she saw him landing.

She saw him coming into the house, the icicles attached to his helmet, his face ruddy, and eyes twinkling. In the look of his eyes—those eyes that showed how deeply joyous and happy he could be—and in his sincerity, his fitness, she knew how much she loved him. "Happy New Year," they greeted each other—and murmured words for each other alone.

"Margaret Cary, darling—next Christmas we'll be together and all the New Years following." He looked up for a moment. Perhaps it was because so much of his life was spent above the ordinary level—perhaps it was instinctive romance—but he looked up and saw the mistletoe.

"The mistletoe and its significance," he said. They both understood, and the mistletoe hung over Margaret Cary and John Robinson as they pledged their devotion under the green leaves and white berries.

Champion Clubs Awarded Trophies.

Cass county has two of the 1930 champion 4-H clubs in Nebraska according to announcement made today from the state club office at Lincoln. The winning dairy and poultry clubs are from Cass county. Wheeler county has the champion baby beef club and Seward county the best swine club for the year.

Each winning club is to be awarded a trophy by the Gooch Milling company. To gain permanent possession of the trophies the clubs must win them twice.

To be eligible for the prizes, clubs had to make their achievement seals, completing the ten requirements as set forth in the 4-H club leader's circular. In addition, their score was based on the number of calves rolled, demonstrations and judging teams competing at county and state fairs, distance to state fair with exhibit, and their story of club activities.

Lloyd Vance led the champion poultry 4-H club from Cass county. It was known as the Eagle Practical Poultry Producers. Twenty-four of the twenty-eight club members enrolled completed their work while the demonstration and judging teams competed at the county and state fairs.

James Wall, Melvin Mayer, and James Foreman of the Eagle club won the judging contest at the state fair last fall and later competed at Chicago where they won sixth place in the national contest.

The other state champion club hailing from Cass county is the Weeping Water Dairy Calf club, led by S. Ray Smith. ## Mrs. A. L. Zink Dies at Minnesota Hospital

Letter From Judge Zink Tells of Wife's Death and Also Serious Illness of Judge

Word coming from Judge A. L. Zink, who is in a sick bed at his home at McCook, Nebraska, where he has made his home for the past fifteen years, and where he first was minister at the Christian church at that place, and who is now serving his third term as county judge of Red Willow county, in a letter written by him to his friend, M. S. Briggs here, tells of the death of the good wife of the Mayo Brothers hospital at Rochester, Minn., on November 19th. In October both Judge Zink and the wife, both being in poor health, went to Rochester for treatment. Mrs. Zink had before underwent three major operations and was in poor health, and when they arrived, the medical staff said it would be necessary for Mrs. Zink to submit to another operation to restore her health. This she did, but she continued to grow worse until death came as above stated. Their daughter who was notified, came and took the remains home to McCook where the funeral was held. At the time of the death of Mrs. Zink, Judge Zink was so poorly that he could not be moved from his room in the hospital to the one where the body of the wife was, and he did not get to see her after she had died.

Some two weeks following her death, Judge Zink was able to be taken to his home at McCook, but has been prostrate with illness and grief since. He is not as yet able to be up, and has written the letter as he lay in his bed, not able to rise. The sympathy of his many friends here goes out to this excellent man in his deep grief, which has come to him, in the sickness of both he and the wife and of the death of his life companion. He will not be able to resume his work on the bench for some time.

The sheriff shortly after being notified was able to round up the man on the streets and he is now being held for the Iowa authorities.
