Keel for keel, the Kaiser's Government and King George's were laying down vessels of war.

It has been the hope of countless millions of people since 1918 that the insidious rivalry implicit in that phrase, "keel to keel," was gone. Statesmen of every nation have tried to fix definite limits to navies and armies, have made security pacts, have founded Leagues and Courts, to stave off a rivalry such as that of pre-war Germany and England-the rivalry which laid the basis of the World War.

For some time it looked hopeful.
