SLAPSTICK COMEDY

Politics in America has been described, aptly enough, as a circus. It has all the hoarse shouting, the spectacular feats, the raucous parades, the cracking of whips and the general confusion of the circus, to be sure. But of late the tactics of the two major parties have appeared more like the slapstick comedy of Hollywood in an earlier and more naive epoch.

Just now Messrs. Fess and Shouse, Chairmen of their respective parties, are lambasting each other verbally over a matter of slight importance, and doing it with no trace of skill or humor. Mr. Fess asserts that Mr. Shouse said thus and so, which was derogatory to the dignity of the Republican party. Mr. Shouse denies everything and adds that his party won last year in Ohio, which is true enough, but somewhat beside the point.

It is precisely as though Fess and Shouse were throwing custard pies at each other's open mouths, in the manner long since perfected and then forgotten by the comedians of the movies. Their inept charges and counter-charges indicate a deep-seated personal animosity, but no semblance of careful investigation of the problem at issue—if indeed there is a problem at issue.

Politics has been like this for a long time. With moments of intelligent discussion, like the Constitutional Convention, the Lincoln-Douglas debates and the campaign of 1912, to break the monotony of futile demagoguery, political controversy has been a persistent sequence of slapstick comedy.

That the work of administration has gone along as well as it has is a tribute to the permanent civil service of the country. But Messrs. Fess and Shouse, in this dispute, represent the slapstick of politics, the mentality of the movie carried into politics.

A REVOLUTIONIST'S RIGHTS

There is something very intriguing about the constitution of Honduras. It lays out the framework of government, assures to citizens the usual assortment of inalienable rights, and then proceeds to guarantee to ambitious political leaders the "right of revolution."

According to this provision of the document General Ferrera, heading the present revolt, has a good chance of getting off scot-free, even though brought to trial. At most his punishment would be 15 years' imprisonment, since that is the maximum penalty for any crime.

Truly, these tropical republics that have such a bad name in the annals of justice do have a certain liberal quality lacking in more stable and thriving nations. Doubtless it grows out of the different position of rebellion there. Revolt is considered a rather normal way to force a new alignment of political power, and not a blow at the integrity of the state. That being the case, the "right of revolution" is entirely logical.

It was Thomas Jefferson who suggested that a revolution every 20 years or so would be a wholesome thing for any republic. And it looks very much as though America's great political philosopher has won a more hearty following in Honduras than in his native land.

DISARMAMENT AND PEACE

On the proved and practical theory that man will not shoot one another if they have no weapons, and that nations will not undertake war minus cannon, ammunition and poison gas, the movement for disarmament is logical. However, we must not make the mistake of thinking that disarmament would positively eliminate chance of war. Disarmament betokens a willingness for peace. The urge for combat would lead to the making of things with which to destroy and kill.

We cannot attach sufficient importance to the development of friendly commercial relations among the nations and of friendly inter-communication. Friendly relations are the reality of brotherly love. Envy, suspicion, discord and hate are more dangerous than armament, or, at least, as dangerous. If it is possible to build up agreeable trade and other relations, disarmament will cease to be a question. Expert observers are correct in expressing fear over the enemies which exist in Europe. Disarming the nations is counteracting war from the outside. The direct and positive plan is to engender the spirit of peace from the inside.

Ten thousand spectators turned out in Chattanooga, Tenn., to see Miss Jack Mitchell strike out Babe Ruth. The home run hitter did not disappoint them. And in this you see why Babe is worth the big money that the New York Americans pay him.

MORE OR LESS TRUE

A husband's hardest job is to get his wife to think as much of him as he does of himself.

We reckon a beauty specialist must at times feel that the only thing harder than having a big time on a quarter is trying to make things of beauty out of some of the faces the women bring in.

The only thing that can be said in favor of long skirts is that they prevent runners from making a pair of silk stockings a total loss.

In a lot of homes the only book that gets a little wear and tear as the family Bible is the cook book.

Another woman who wishes she had taken a chance on a career is the wife whose only need for traveling clothes are for the kind she needs on the trips she takes from the kitchen to the dining room.

A dainty bridge-lunch usually is easier on the eyes than on the digestion.

It's none of our affair, but our guess is that the pajama costumes were not introduced to boost the sales of undies.

When a bride wakes up to the sad truth her prince charming is just a big disappointment she'll have to make the best of, she is pretty apt to spend her time trying to get the best of him.

You usually can tell by a once over of the wife that from all the waiting on him she ever does her husband never is going to mistake her for the servant.

The fact is, of course, that, although some concerns have kept up salaries and wages, most have applied reductions. The levels are not as high as they were at the beginning of the depression. With a large number of persons idle, the situation is one in which the supply exceeds the demand. The conclusive fact is observant.

Chicago's first citizen, Al Capone, had to rebuke Gen. Smedley D. Butler a few weeks ago for making some unflattering remarks about him. But the General persists in being annoying. In a lecture at Philadelphia he says 2,500 U. S. marines "could clean up Chicago in one week." Maybe some of the better element in Chicago wish they could be given the chance.

Those looking forward instead of backward see what's coming first.
