Attempt is Made to Save Marine Officer

Brigadier General Dunlap Is Caught by Avalanche—Fear Rescue Alive Improbable

Tours, France—Buried alive in a cave in which men of the stone age once lived, Brigadier General Dunlap of the United States Marine Corps was the object of frenzied rescue efforts although hope that he had escaped death virtually had been abandoned. An avalanche from a hilltop overlooking the Loire river engulfed him with two farmer folk—man and wife—with whom he had been friendly.

The marine officer was caught with Denis Briant, the farmer, while both sought to save Briant's wife who was trapped first by the fall of earth and rock. It was estimated two or three days may elapse before the imprisoned trio can be reached. Mrs. Dunlap, who was preparing with her husband to visit the historic tower of Clug Mars La Pile, nearby, witnessed the tragedy and was in a state of near collapse.

The officer and his wife were at Briant's home Tuesday when from a nearby barn where Madame Briant was engaged in her housework, they heard her scream. Simultaneously there was a thundering roar as the top of the precipice above their home began to split and topple over. The two men rushed to Madame Briant's assistance but before they could reach her they were themselves engulfed.

Local gendarmes and inhabitants sought frenziedly to penetrate the slide. The rescue workers expressed belief that the men probably were crushed in and that therefore little hope could be held for those within.

The Ladder Shrinks

Or it would look that way. Some one hung a story on the writer about falling out of an upstairs window a score or more of years ago and the story was recalled when a certain citizen of Nehawka, who had a tree at his home, with an averaging limb, which was not as graceful as he would like to have and to make it the more beautiful in its appearance, borrowed a neighbors ladder, placing the ladder against the bough, ascended the ladder, standing almost straight and only leaning on the bough a few inches, and proceeded to saw the limb off. Now do not understand that he sawed it off between the ladder and the trunk of the tree. No not that, but where he should have sawed it off. Now comes another feature. The limb was heavy, and when it was sawed off the stump of the limb wished to crawl up when relieved of the weight of the portion sawed off, this shortening the ladder, or apparently so. Then there was a dilemma for our friend had to hold the limb down in order to make connections between the tree, the ladder and the ground. He could not go down and get help, but calling his daughter, came and as they were figuring a way out of the case, a neighbor came along and they secured a rope, casting it over, our friend was able to tie the ladder fast to the limb still remaining on the tree, and then all was safe. What was done then, you will have to ask some one else. We were not there.

Many of the people of Nehawka were visiting at the air race at Omaha on last Sunday and enjoyed the exercises with the exception of the tragic accident which took the life of one of the most capable fliers, Charles W. Willard, has who attended the Nehawka high school for the past two years was a student in the Murray school for two years before and during the four years of high school had the highest percentage of any scholar in the class.

See Basis Laid for New Period of Prosperity

Wall Street Bankers Believe Slump Dictates Corrective Process—Increased Efficiency

New York, May 17.—The basis for a new period of prosperity has already been laid by industrial and merchandising companies throughout the country, through the corrective process dictated by the current slump, according to bankers in Wall Street.

While the bankers agree that it cannot be forecast when business activity will turn upward, they say that many constructive steps have been taken during the last 20 months, which have increased the efficiency of corporations, and will make them greater potential money makers when normal times return.

What Has Been Done

Through constructive steps fall roughly into the following categories:

Improvements in sales, manufacturing and administrative technique.
Changes in capital structure which have reduced the fixed charges on the outstanding securities of corporations.

Increased efficiency of workers.
Reduction in interest charges resulting from low interest rates.

Modernization of many plants, causing lower depreciation charges.
Concentration of production and sales on more profitable units, and the elimination of unprofitable or high cost units.

Reduction in the number of competing companies, through the failure and liquidation of weak organizations.

A "Tightening Up."

Improvements in the sales, manufacturing and administrative methods of corporations has resulted from the "tightening up" process which has been going on for nearly two years, bankers declare. Sales organizations have been revamped, dead wood has been cut from the administrative forces, more efficient production methods have been installed and in general there has been a stoppage of leaks which were noticed during the prosperous years of 1928 and 1929. While these savings are not sufficient to offset the tremendous decrease in the volume of business during the last two years, they will contribute to larger profits when normal conditions return, the bankers believe.

Increased Efficiency

Bankers throughout the country have commented recently on the increased efficiency of workers during the current depression. Part of this increased efficiency, the bankers believe, has resulted from the competition for jobs, but in many instances it is said to have resulted from improved utilization of labor that has been devised by the managements of large corporations.

Additional savings have been effected by scores of corporations through changes in their capital structure during the last two years. One of the most common changes has been the reduction of the corporation's authorized capitalization, by the writing down of the par value of its common stock. In this way, state taxes have been reduced. Another policy which has been followed by many corporations has been the purchase in the open market of their own bonds, at a large discount from which these issues were floated several years ago.—World Herald.

POPE DEPLORES THE RIOTS

Vatican City—In the first public declaration he has made of conditions resulting from the recent riots in Spain, Pope Pius XI described the burning of religious houses as "sacrileges against God and holy religion." A heavy responsibility exists, he said, for the violence committed.

The pope addressed a group of Spanish pilgrims headed by the auxiliary bishop of Valencia, who came to Rome to celebrate the fourteenth anniversary of the labor encyclical of Pope Leo XIII.

"What can we tell you," the pope said, "at such a distance, with uncertainty regarding news? We are sorry to say, however, that there is a certainty of many unhappy and sorrowful things. It is certain, also, that there is a very great responsibility on those who have caused these unhappy things and on those who have done these unhappy things. Very great, also, is the responsibility of those who allowed these things to take place and have not hindered them.

"Certainly conditions in Spain already were too much compromised and menaced by many evils without need that there be added these disorders. These sacrileges against God and the holy religion."

The pope added a message of mercy: "We pray God," he said, "that He will reply with His justice to the merciful. In the meantime, returning to your country, say that the pope prays for Spain, say also that the pope prays and so also do the faithful there."

DRASTIC ORDERS IN SPAIN

Seville, Spain—Police arrested many alleged communists and other left agitators under suspicion that they participated in recent attacks on churches and convents. The looting continued throughout Andalusia. Authorities intend to try those accused of burning and looting the church property at summary court martials. Military headquarters announced that those responsible for spreading false and alarming reports will be severely punished. Soldiers received orders to shoot on sight any body attempting new burning or looting.
