The St. John's parochial school in this city, which has for the past few years been under the management of the Ursuline sisterhood, they furnishing the teaching force for the school, is soon to open for the fall and winter term of teaching in the secular and religious education.

The school this year will be free, here being no tuition charged the pupils for their schooling but the cost of the operation of the school will be cared for by the Catholic residents of the two parishes of the city.

There were 124 pupils last year at this school and this number will probably be larger this year as a expected in the lower grades of the
