Maybe we are at the dawn of a new era. But most of us don't get up that early.

There's always room at the top of the racketeering business, if you can get low-down enough.

Travelers say Turkish officials are hard to bribe. They will not take the Caliph you're looking.

Descendants of proud old families are decadent. Well, they've been descending for several hundred years.

Maybe you can't buy happiness with money, but you have a notable advantage when the bidding starts.

And now it transpires American Indians have been getting the dole for a hundred years. Wait till they find that out.

Whisky can be blamed for a lot of fool things men do, of course, but then there are lots of men who act that way even when cold sober.

After the efficiency expert has looked over the business for a few months, you do not meet the head of the concern any more. You contact him.

One of the economies which congressional champions of economy never advocate is the elimination of the costly perquisites granted to congressmen.

Bridge is an ultra-refined game where one can lose $100 in a stylish way and not gamble. Craps is a low game where a man can lose a $1 and get pulled for gambling.

A Chicago man brings suit for divorce because his wife wanted to have a big celebration of the anniversary of her wedding to her first husband. That does seem like rubbing it in.

"It is my earnest conviction," remarks Mahatma Gandhi, "that no man loses his freedom, except through his own weakness." That may be so, but it seems hardly gallant to call her that.

The big wonder isn't so much that most of our American football has been taken over by lads with Italian and Irish names, as that frequently you find Irish and Italian on the same team, all playing good football.

The man who switches on the death cure for the hot squat chair at Sing-Sing has finished his term of office and says he doesn't want the job again. It's a ghastly occupation but no doubt there will be plenty of applicants.

Getting right down to cold-blooded, matter-of-fact diagnosis, there has been something the matter with the world for a long time, but it hasn't been taking anything for it. Perhaps a thorough purging is the proper prescription.

Sir William Phené Neal, former Lord Mayor of London, says he has a pair of shoes he has been wearing 26 years. That old gink ought to get out of his auto and walk occasionally. No wonder the shoe manufacturers of Great Britain are having a hard time.

There are none so low but they have their triumphs. Small successes suffice for small souls.

England ought to have all the oil in the world. She has more troubled waters than any other nation.

One of the encouraging signs of the times is that hotel bellhops now consider a dime a tip instead of an insult.

England seems to be going on the general idea that the Conservatives should be conserved while there is something left to conserve.

Wouldn't it be grand if they could invent an anti-freeze solution a man could pour into himself in the fall and save buying and wearing an overcoat?

The tragic thing about depression is the terrific volume of man power going to waste—power that could be utilized for useful purpose, and make this a better world in which to live.

WOMEN IN BUSINESS

The woman in business was first pitted. Effort was made to camouflage her social lapse by calling her "lady help," but gradually ladies went out and women came in. Then, regardless of her achievements, people began to praise her for entering upon "unusual occupations." A woman driver or a woman steeplejack might do well at her business or she might not; she was a woman, and therefore she was exploited for doing things no women ever had done before. Later there came a critical appraisal based on "executive positions." If a woman were still under orders, she was classed low in the business scale; but as an executive, she was highly regarded.

Stability implies making good according to professional standards, achieving a certain financial security, a certain permanence in the job. In other words, while women often start in business "on a shoe string," stability means that they are at least good risks financially for those who deal with them. And while some women who are employed may change their jobs, it means that they have a certain capacity which will lead toward re-employment and permanence in the field of business.

Perhaps this is the finest test of all, for it presupposes another and still higher step when positions will be accorded both to men and women irrespective of sex and on the sole basis of ability.

Women have a certain definite contribution to make to business and the professions. It might be said that they bring a "humanizing" element, that because of long years of handling numberless details at the same time they are especially competent for positions which require doing a dozen things at once, or even that there is a certain spiritual quality in womanhood which lifts the materialism of business to a higher level.

But men, too, have certain qualities which are their especial contribution, and it will be a better day for the business world when sex competition and sex emphasis are laid aside for the partnership in which the highest qualities of both men and women may find expression.

AN ENDURING EXPEDIENT

Road construction, seized upon in the United States more than elsewhere as an expedient to provide employment during recent months, moves steadily toward a much more substantial standing in the nation's economic thinking. Instead of a mere stop-gap, highway building may prove itself to be an enduring agency for the absorption of much of the labor surplus created by technologic improvements in the processes of other industries.

Many are convinced that economic conditions are improving. Yet there is no abatement of projects and plans for new highways. Continuing programs involving billions of dollars are being advocated. The proposal for a $2,000,000,000 transcontinental super-highway which already has been assured of introduction in the Seventy-second Congress actually is the most modest of several such enterprises. The sponsor of another such proposal envisages a ten-lane transcontinental highway that would cost $8,000,000,000.

Why has this temporary palliative taken on the qualities of a permanent remedy for a considerable part of the unemployment which many assume to be normal and inevitable?

There are several reasons. One is that the deeper study given to the needs of highway transport has indicated that the country is even less "overproduced" in regard to roads than the staunchest advocates of more roads have indicated. Considered from the standpoints of efficiency, safety and beauty, the nation's highway network, the greatest in the world, still offers room for considerable improvement. Motor-roads is a vast thing and need more space in which to move. The $3,000,000,000 poured into new construction in 1929 and 1931 clearly has not expanded the area sufficiently.

A concrete illustration of the meaning of an expanded and improved highway system is that relating to motor vehicle use at present. Gasoline consumption figures of the United States Bureau of Public Roads indicate a total motor vehicle travel of 180,000,000 miles this year. The average car is covering several hundred more miles than last year. The explanation is that its owner had more miles of good roads and consequently made more use of his automobile.

In addition to the need for more and better roads, highway construction commends itself to many because of its capacity to provide jobs. According to Thomas H. Macdonald, chief of the Bureau of Public Roads, this aspect of the enterprise is not fully understood. His figures show that when federal aid construction was at its peak during the summer, it gave direct employment to 384,000 men and indirectly provided for twice as many more in the preparation of raw materials and machinery.

Another interesting figure offered by the Federal Government's highest road authority is that which reveals that 80 cents of the roadbuilding dollar eventually goes for labor, making it an especially influential consumer dollar.

Because of such considerations as these, the accelerated trend in highway construction is likely to outlive the conditions which brought it into operation.

Governor "Alfalfa Bill" Murray, of Oklahoma, broke into the front pages of the newspapers the other day by proving to the reporters he could stand on his head. Nothing remarkable about that. What the nation sorely needs is not Governors who can stand on their heads, but who can keep their heads squarely on their shoulders and do some straight thinking.

It appears now that Mr. Edward B. McLean, the Washington publisher, isn't even a first class bigamist. His graceful attempt in that direction is clouded somewhat by the fact that his second marriage is only a sort of declaration, or threat, or something. Being a flop as a bigamist must be very humiliating.

A Russian-born woman died in Philadelphia the other day at the age of 113. If she had stayed at home, she might have died of starvation in infancy.

One redeeming feature about hard times: Wives do not go through their husband's pockets as formerly. They know it isn't worth while.
