A relapse came and a second operation performed, following which he passed away. USE OF MILITIA WANTED

Castle, Okl.—A national guard hunt for Charles Floyd, steel jacketed desperado, was advocated by the Oklahoma Bankers' association following two bank robberies Thursday in Oklahoma county. The bankers association requested Governor Murray to call out the guardsmen shortly after receiving word that their insurance rates had been doubled because of increasing depredations in the state. Fifty-one banks were looted last year.

Altho banks at Paden and Castle, ten miles apart, were robbed by different gangs, officers believed Floyd, identified as one of the machine gun robbers here, was the power behind both raids in which approximately $5,000 was taken. Eugene Gum, secretary of the association in Oklahoma City, declared that Murray should call out the guard and "offer a big reward for capture of Floyd and his pals who enforce their edicts with machine guns."

Governor Murray was out of the state on a speaking tour and could not be reached for comment. Nearly a dozen bank raids are attributed to Floyd, whose activities are said to include so-called "Robin Hood" acts of elusivity.

TAX CASE BEFORE COURT

Washington—Oklahoma, contested vigorously in the supreme court the claim of the United States that it had the right to tax incomes from oil and gas taken under lease from school lands owned by the state. Federal taxes on income of the Coronado Oil and Gas company were at issue, the United States having lost in the lower courts. Solicitor General Thomas C. Gurnea for the government was opposed by Senator Gore and David A. Richardson for Oklahoma.

Under the Oklahoma enabling act, by which it became a state, public lands were to be sold to the United States for public school purposes. The United States admitted the oil and gas contained in this land, while held in trust by Oklahoma, was exempt from federal taxation, but asserted it had the right to tax income of private individuals and corporations derived from the sale of such oil and gas taken from such land when produced under leases with the state. Oklahoma contended those operating under leases on the school land were agents or instrumentalities of the state exempt from federal taxation.

Hoppers Able to Live Through Severe Winter

Entomologist Advises Farmers to Strick to Bran Mixture for Control of Insects.

Warning against too much optimism among farmers in regard to a natural killing off of grasshoppers by cold death was issued Friday by L. A. Gath, entomologist in the department of agriculture.

Gates advised against placing too much reliance upon the "frost lice" often found on grasshoppers, and recommends the use of poison bran as a control measure.

"Recent reports that grasshoppers have been killed in large numbers by the snow and low temperatures of the past few weeks are likely to be misleading," Gath said, "as grasshoppers often hibernate in burrows and other sheltered spots." "There is no authentic record to show that the several species of grasshoppers which caused most of the damage to crops in Nebraska last year, have started to hatch. There are some kinds of grasshoppers that normally hatch in the fall and spend the winter as partially grown individuals and no doubt some of these were seen sunning themselves last month on the warm sides of haystacks and in other sheltered spots.

"The kinds of grasshoppers which caused most of the crop damage last year spent the winter in the egg stage and rarely if ever hatch in any considerable numbers before spring. While in the egg stage they are so well protected that it is doubtful whether Nebraska winter temperatures are every low enough to kill any large percentage of them. Neither are the eggs easily injured by frosts, as these will not hatch until they will hatch after having been in low lands under water for several months. However, cold wet weather in the spring after the little hoppers hatch does cause many of them to die.

"The little 'red lice' so often observed on or near the base of the wings of grasshoppers are mites and have not been an important factor in grasshopper control. There are certain kinds of parasitic flies that sometimes do kill the grasshoppers in large numbers and may eventually wipe them out after much loss has been suffered.

"The most practical and effective method of artificial control is the use of poisoned bran bait or some similar mixture as recommended by the college of agriculture. When properly used these mixtures will not injure wild birds, domestic poultry or brain animals. Runners of such losses are usually not rounded on fact, and do much harm in discouraging the use of the best method of control known."

House Approves Huge Credit Bill by Wide Margin

Must Go to Conference Before Sent to the White House—Vote 335 to 55

Washington, D. C., Jan. 15.—The two billion dollar reconstruction corporation bill—foremost of the measures proposed by President Hoover for enlivening business—tonight was given overwhelming approval of the house.

Already passed by the senate, the measure now is one step away from the White house. It next goes to conference for adjustment of differing provisions accepted by the two chambers.

The purpose of the bill is to infuse two billion dollars of credit into business channels by loans from its vast government supported funds, to banks and other financial institutions which, in turn are to pass the money on to industry, agriculture and commerce.

After passing the measure by a vote of 335 to 55, the house tonight sent to conference the second item on the reconstruction program, a bill to increase the capitalization of the federal land banks by 100 million dollars and thus increase the credit resources of the farmers. The major task of the conferences will concern an amendment attached by the senate which would require the banks to postpone mortgage payment installments.

Another of the president's suggestions for helping economic recovery—a balanced budget—received the attention during the day of the house ways and means committee in its report on the reconstruction bill. It heard Chester Gray of the American farm bureau federation present a broad increase program calling for additional revenue totaling about $1,500,000,000 annually through levies on American investments abroad, higher surtaxes, income and corporation taxes.

Forty-three democrats and 12 republicans voted against the reconstruction corporation bill. During the prolonged debate this group assailed the proposal as one that would relieve big business corporations and impose additional burdens on the taxpayers.

More than 50 amendments were offered, but only four of any importance were accepted. An amendment by Chairman Jones of the agriculture committee, allotting 200 million dollars of the total capitalization to agricultural credit and live stock corporations and agricultural associations, was approved.

Two amendments by Representative Rayburn (dem., Tex.) were accepted unanimously. One would prohibit payment of any fee or commission by any applicant for a loan to any representative or attorney, and the other would impose heavy penalties for violations of that section.

In getting the bill to conference, parliament technicalities may cause some difficulty, but in view of the overwhelming vote in both chambers, its sponsors are not worried.

Those voting against the bill were: Republicans—Amlic, Hrisigan.

Grand Island—"Grandma" Mary Berger, 100, resident of the soldiers' home here for fifteen years, died a week after she had fallen and suffered a broken hip. Mrs. Berger was born in Benton county, Ohio, May 25, 1831, and came here with her husband, a veteran of the Civil war, forty years ago.

On her ninety-ninth birthday, she took an airplane ride and was planning to take another on her 100th birthday. She was an expert seamstress, and six years ago President Coolidge accepted one of her quilts as a Christmas present. She sent President Hoover one of the quilts last Christmas but it was returned by a secretary who believed she had offered it for sale.
