FARMERS TO DEMONSTRATE. Chicago, July 3rd.—Agricultural America has prepared to stage Monday, under the auspices of the American farm bureau federation, a gigantic Independence day celebration in 10,000 farm communities. E. A. O'Neil, president of the federation, said farmers will be urged "to organize more compactly for independence from economic tyrannies that long have obstructed the advance of the nation's basic industry, agriculture."

The nationwide farm bureau demonstration, O'Neil said, has been officially recognized by the United States George Washington Bicentennial commission. Large turnouts at the various gatherings are indicated, O'Neil said, and in some places estimates of attendance exceed 25,000. In many communities the farm bureau members have joined with business groups in the towns. The demonstrations will take varied forms in the different communities. A majority of them men prominent in national agricultural circles will speak.

In Illinois, O'Neil said, many county groups are planning hill bonfires at which effigies representing "low farm prices," "unjust taxes," "poisonous propaganda" and other "enemies" of agriculture will be burned.

Suggestions on Making Jelly.

Failure in making good jelly is often due to the amount of sugar added to the fruit juice. Three-fourths cup of sugar per cup of fruit is about the right proportion, according to the Nebraska Agricultural College. Too much sugar makes a soft, syrupy jelly; too little sugar results in a tough, poorly flavored product. Both cane and beet sugar give satisfactory results. If over-ripe fruit is used, one tablespoon lemon juice may be added to each cup of fruit juice just before combining the sugar. This improves the flavor, texture and clearness.

Rapid boiling produces a clear jelly. Long heating destroys the pectin or jelling power of the juice. A large flat bottomed kettle is better than a deep one. The mixture is stirred until the sugar is dissolved, then boiled rapidly until the juice sheets off the spoon. Another test is the simultaneous formation of two two drops, broad at the base, on the side of the table-spoon.

Nebraska's Apple Crop.

Nebraska's 1932 apple crop will be considerably lighter than last year, E. H. Hoppert, extension horticulturist at the College of Agriculture, declared today following his return from the fruit growing section of southeastern Nebraska. However, Hoppert believes the producers will receive a higher price for their apples this fall than they did last year.

Hoppert inspected orchards around Nebraska City, Sauerb, Union, Auburn and Brownville, on the trip and found the crop very spotted. The crop appears to be the heaviest around Peru and Julian with the exception of the winesap variety. The unfavorable weather conditions this spring combined with the heavy crop of last year are factors causing the reduced winesap yield.

Scab has also been a factor in reducing the yields of the apples. The scab got on the stems of the young apples early in the season and caused the dropping to be heavier than usual. Hoppert says the scab is heavier than any year since 1916, due chiefly to the wet weather this spring.

Grimes and Jonathans are expected to be among the highest yielding varieties in the southeastern territory this year. Black Twig, however, is another that may produce a heavy crop. Duchess, an early apple, will yield but a light crop. Some orchardists are beginning to harvest the largest of the Duchess apples for the early market in thinning out the crop on the trees. Most of the harvesting of the other varieties will not be done until in August, September and October.

Indications point toward a higher price for the apples in orchards this fall than received last year, Hoppert declared. The southern crop this year is light and the Nebraska crop is much lighter than usual, causing the supply to be relatively low. It is expected that the crop over the United States as a whole will be but 50 per cent normal.

Plant Wheat on Fly Safe Date.

Nebraska farmers who attended the annual agronomy field day at the College of Agriculture in Lincoln Tuesday found by visiting the experimental fields that the planting of winter wheat on fly safe date or immediately thereafter is a paying practice. Experiments conducted with plantings of winter wheat at different dates during the past eight years brought this fact out.

Though the wheat producer is up against a problem in determining the time of planting wheat, undue delay also results in decreased yields, the tests showed. If delayed for one week, the yields are cut down approximately six bushels per acre. The wheat doesn't stool out so well and does not get so well established for winter if planted too late.

The eight-year averages also showed that early planting of winter wheat is a poor practice because of the decreased yield due to the infestation of Hessian Fly. For eastern Nebraska the fly safe date is not definitely determined and varies each year although for the experiment station at the college it is generally considered to be October 1.

One plot in the planting experiment showed a remarkable difference in the probable yields for this year. Wheat planted on September 26 last fall is expected to yield but about four bushels to the acre while that planted on October 1 will probably make 23 bushels. The former was heavily infested with the fall brood of Hessian Fly and suffered again this spring while the later planted wheat is in much better condition.

A four-year plot of alfalfa varieties located on the agronomy farm showed that Grimm and Cossack yields the best. The South European varieties as well as those from South America and the southwestern states in this country had thinned out considerably. There was more wilt on the Grimm and Cossack than in the northwestern common varieties and Turketstin. The Grimm and Cossack varieties are cold resistant but are susceptible to alfalfa wilt. For that reason they are not generally recommended for planting on irrigated or sub-irrigated valleys where the wilt is more prevalent.

In addition to seeing the tests conducted on the time of planting and alfalfa variety tests, the farmers and their wives at the college for the day also observed the oats and small grain variety tests. Guides were present on the agronomy farm to show them about the different plots.

KUSH DISMISSED BY JUDGE

Omaha.—Thomas J. Kush, thirty, Omaha, was dismissed by District Judge Rhoades Tuesday after a hearing on charges of aiding the delinquency of a minor, Frank Bault, sixteen, Tacoma, Wash.

Bault several weeks ago told police that Kush had offered him $100 to kill Mrs. Kush. After police had arrested Kush, Bault said he had had no intention of killing Mrs. Kush even if Kush had given him the $100.

Kush told police he had given Bault sixty cents for food and made the "offer" as a joke to test the youth's reaction. Judge Rhoades, after hearing the evidence, said there was no probable cause for Kush making such an offer and dismissed the case. Bault will be sent home to Tacoma.
