Rites for Dr. D. E. Hansen

From the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Palmer was held on last Saturday a funeral in honor of the late Dr. D. E. Hansen, who was drowned while in an effort to serve a patient and was attempting to cross the swollen Weeping Water Creek on horse back. There were many there to pay their last respect and honor to a friend of humanity and a young man without a blemish. The house and grounds were not able to accommodate all who wished to come to pay honor to Dr. Hansen. The discourse was delivered by the Rev. W. A. Taylor, a friend of the deceased, and pastor at Union. Following the services here, the remains were taken to Omaha, where the body lay in state until early Monday morning, when a second funeral service was held, and the funeral party took up its journey to West Point, where the deceased had lived as a boy and there another service was held, after which the remains were tenderly laid in their last resting place to await the trumpet of the Angel of the Resurrection.

Gust Nelson has been looking after the amusement parlor during the illness of Mr. Anderson.

Dies on Coast Sunday

Robert Alford, who was sick but a few days at his home in Long Beach, Calif., passed away there early Sunday morning. Mr. Alford was born in Ohio and came here with his parents when a small boy. The parents died some years ago, the father on October 5, 1896, and the mother was killed in a cyclone in 1913. Robert Alford was united in marriage to Miss Susan Stout in 1915. They farmed a portion of the time near Elmwood and a number of years since they went to the coast to reside, where they have since remained.

The remains are being shipped to Nehawka, leaving Long Beach Wednesday and are expected to arrive here Saturday. The funeral and burial will occur here either Saturday or Sunday. A number of months ago, Mr. Alford was a visitor with relatives and friends here. Mr. Alford leaves to mourn his departure, one brother, Albert, together with his wife, who is a sister of Mrs. V. P. Sheldon. Also an uncle, Alvin A. McReynolds and family and Miss Lannas McReynolds, all of Nehawka.

"The Country Doctor"

Dr. Douglas E. Hansen, a friend of mankind and true humanitarian—"the country doctor"—making a brave fight to serve a suffering patient residing across the raging waters of the swollen Weeping Water creek, lost his life early Friday morning.

And with his passing, Nehawka loses more than a mere practitioner! No fear in the mind of this man, when he found the waters too deep to pass thru with the borrowed auto of his friend, Walter Wunderlich, after his own car, watersoaked from the long and heavy rain refused to start. Only a determination to use every available means of reaching the bedside of a suffering patient, there to do what aid he could. So, he secured a horse and went forth. All went well until they neared the entrance to the bridge, over which water was dashing madly. The force of the water pushed the horse from the embankment into the water. The doctor became disengaged from the back of the animal, which swam safely to the further side of the stream, while Dr. Hansen attempted to swim for shore, but the current like a raging mill race, carried him down and engulfed him in its treacherous muddiness—against which it was of little avail to fight. The unequal struggle was witnessed by some forty of his friends assembled on the bank, and among whom was his brother, Warren, who had advised him not to attempt such a hazardous crossing.

The body was recovered during the afternoon as the waters subsided, and was buried at West Point, his old boyhood home. Thus went the way of the earth, a "country doctor," who against the elements, the bad roads, the weather, the heat, the cold, the darkness and uncertainty of the bleakest nights, was ever faithful to the high calling of his profession—ready to minister unto his fellowman and do his utmost to bring health and hope to those who were sick.

He, like that Great Physician, the Master of heaven and earth, continued to serve until the strength of his body was overpowered and his life wiped out by the treacherous waters.

People of Nehawka and vicinity, who have been so faithfully served by Dr. Hansen during the two years of his residence here, will never forget his sterling qualities or how he met death in the performance of his mission—a martyr to the uplifting of humanity. All honor to him and to the thousands of other "country doctors" who like this good man, stand ready at all times to meet the emergencies of their profession.
