Ready For Greatest Show

Dr. Otto Struve, director of Yerkes Observatory, who, with brother scientists, will observe the eclipse of the sun today (providing old man sun is shining in that part of the country). It is hoped that secrets of Nature hitherto unknown to man will be revealed. Yerkes Observatory, located at Williams Bay, Wisconsin, is shown in lower photo. If cloudiness reigns everywhere as here, over the eclipse area, research work will be greatly hindered. Although airplanes and balloons may soar above the cloud layer, observation will be limited to the naked eye, since it would be hard to train telescopes of any size on the sun from such moving objects, according to E. J. Weirich, local star gazer, who had rigged up an extensive observation apparatus for viewing today's eclipse, but was greatly hindered by the foggy condition prevailing here.
