SENTIMENT

Some say there is too much sentiment in what I write, So I shall presume to hitch my wagon to a kite, And bring down the muses if they can be found, To steady my thoughts some closer aground. The sentimental joy of devotion, to a good and noble cause, May break down individualism and make one pause, And scrutinize his own deep sense of soul,

For what profound thoughts, may o'er his spirit roll. It might be sentiment would some, their reason overthrow, And sit in judgment on the throne, until the rivers overflow,

But let the light of wisdom break upon the scene, And sentiment will gather force to flash upon the screen.

The words of a mighty potentate would lose their force. And a bombast might harangue, until he is hoarse, Without a little sentiment to spice specific words, rific crash. Then reason takes flight to the unknown crags, Don't fear the consequences if youare torn into rags.

Come, let us take heart, for the time is near,

To rise above credulity, even doubts and fear, If sentiment helps to override the tempestuous storm, I feel it my prerogative to mould it into form. -J. R. T.

The chief feature of the evening was presented under the department of education of the district of which Mrs. Stewart Griffin of Sterling, is chairman, consisting of an address by Dr. W. H. Morton, of the teacher's college of the University of Nebraska.

The address of Dr. Morton was on "The American Public School, One Factor in Building Citizenship," a masterful presentation of the influence that the school has on the forming of the higher ideals of citizenship in the youth of the land. Dr. Morton is one of the leaders in the educational work of the state and his address was one that all of the banquet party will long remember.

The Corterie Club, of Pawnee City, was presented in a very delightful and entertaining musical comedy, "The Quest of the Gypsy," the ladies giving a most charming rendition of the comedy.

Mrs. A. F. Nuquist, general federation director, was also on the toast list and gave as her subject, "The Modern Day Club Woman," discussing the various phases of the club work and the broad program that is covered in the courses of study and activities of the clubs over the na-
