Corn Beyond Help in Many Nebraska Counties

Temperatures up to 117 and High Winds Are Reported—Some Counties Doing Well.

Some of the corn has been injured beyond repair by temperatures ranging up to 117 degrees, high winds and lack of moisture. One of the worst areas centers around Clay county and another is centered about southeastern part of Custer county. However, considerable injury has been done in the drouth counties outside of these two areas, according to A. E. Anderson after making an extended trip into drouth counties.

Some of Nebraska's corn is already hopeless, he says, and the balance in the drouth counties will be in the same condition unless relieved by rain soon. Temperatures ranging up to 117 degrees and high winds are simply burning up the corn. Even corn ranging one half to one foot high is burning in the worst areas, in other sections that have had rain, corn is withstanding the terrific punishment much better than one could expect. Even forage crops are turning brown. Some of the more advanced corn is tasseling and firing. The second crop of alfalfa in the drouth areas is much lighter than the first crop and it is too short to cut. Considerable of the alfalfa is being pastured.

A continuation of high temperatures and drouth for another week or two will ruin most of the corn that is still in fair condition and is even threatening the forage crops. It will mean the forced sale of a large proportion of the livestock as here is no hay, pasture or feed in sight. About the only chance that is left in the worst areas is a late autumn with August rainfall that might enable farmers to plant and produce a little forage. Immediate rain will still revive the forage crops that are planted. One of the greatest concerns now is the outcome of corn in the more favored sections, under the terrific temperatures. Corn has made good growth in the sections favored with moisture and is now rawing heavily on the moisture supply. White caps are already showing up and the high temperatures may blast the tassel.

MUCH ICE IS USED

The artificial ice plant of the owa-Nebraska Light & Power Co., in his city has been operating for the past few weeks at its full capacity and open day and night to serve the interests of the patrons of the company.

The plant is turning out ten and a half tons each day and this has been insufficient to supply the demand and as a consequence in addition to the output of the local plant here has been a great deal of ice shipped here from Shenandoah and other Iowa plants.

The present season with its intense heat has brought a large increase in the business of the plant and almost an hour of the day or night there are found persons at the plant to secure ice in addition to the regular deliveries that are made over the city.
