"GENE" O'SULLIVAN HERE

From Friday's Daily Eugene, or "Gene" O'Sullivan, one of the leading contenders for the democratic nomination for governor, was in the city today. Mr. O'Sullivan is one of the best known attorneys in the state and his friends are many over this section of Nebraska especially. Mr. O'Sullivan spent a short time visiting in the business section of the city with the local merchants and getting acquainted. He expects to visit here later in the interest of his campaign and to present his views on the issues of the day.

Kittenball Control Board Issues Ruling

Defines Limit for Residence of Players as Within 10 Miles of City; Present Players Excepted

The board of control of the Plattsmouth kittenball league last night at their meeting took up the much discussed question of just how far from this city the term "trade territory" might apply in the securing of players for the various teams.

The board decided that the trade limits as far as the securing of kittenball players by the various teams would be set at ten miles and the players must be bona fide residents of that territory to be eligible.

It was decided that the teams as now constituted should not be distributed and will be allowed to play the season as they now stand.

The league now has twelve clubs and the governing body has a very busy time in handling the various questions that have up and have shown excellent judgment in the manner in which they passed on the matters to come before them.

SEE A 'CORPSE' WALKING

Chestertown, Md.—No serious injuries were reported here after a gathering of Negro mourners had scattered to the winds on the belief they saw a "corpse" walking. The scattering commenced immediately when Wilbur Stewart, clad in a white gown, arrived in a hearse, spring spryly from the machine, and walked into his house. He had ridden in the hearse because the local ambulance was out of fix and there was no other way to bring him home from the Easton, Mr. hospital thirty miles away. When the hearse was sent for the 50 year old Negro, family and friends believed he had died, and they had arranged plans for a funeral. In deep mourning they stood about the Stewart home as the hearse drew up. Then suddenly out walked Wilbur, dressed in a white hospital night shirt. In a matter of seconds Wilbur had the neighborhood to himself. Friends, neighbors and family took flight. Two went out of a second story window. One mourner dashed thru a screen door without waiting to open it. Hours later only a few of the mourners had returned to congratulate Wilbur on still being alive.

VISIT AT CHICAGO

There have been various prayer meetings for rain, but speaking from an advantageous point, we assure you the most fervent prayers through the entire drought have been those of the column poets.

(Political Advertising) ANNOUNCEMENT

This is to announce my candidacy for the office of County Treasurer on the democratic ticket. You remember I was your candidate four years ago. Then you, my friends, were very loyal. I lacked only a few votes of being elected. I am asking just the same loyal friendliness at this time from my old friends and such help from the new ones. A word as to my qualifications:

I am a farmer, and all know the rigorous life they live and how we gain our knowledge of the value of the dollar and the way we should conserve them. For twelve years, I was accountant for the Union Pacific at Omaha and with the general education which years in business has brought has fully equipped me for the position I am asking at your hands.

Primaries, August 14th. I thank you for your support. J. L. STAMP, Democratic Candidate for County Treasurer.

Secretary Wallace Defends AAA Farm Plan

Urges that the Voters of the Farm Districts Support Measures that Have Brought Relief.

The effort to use the fact of the present nation-wide drought as an excuse for attacking the agricultural adjustment program is typical of short-sighted leadership, Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace asserted in an address delivered Wednesday at Ruston, La.

Excerpts from the address of the Secretary follow:

Farmers on Guard The old dealers are trying this fall to elect a congress of men who are unfriendly to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and unfriendly to the farmers except in terms of superficial lip service. They hope to do away with the processing tax. They recently have been pointing out the fact of the most extraordinary drought in 40 years as an argument for abandoning the entire agricultural adjustment program.

They say that the drought has disposed of the surpluses and that the agricultural adjustment effort should therefore, be abandoned. In a few cases they have even seduced hard-headed farmers to this point of view.

This effort to use the fact of the drought as an attack on the agricultural adjustment program is typical of the short-sighted leadership which characterized the republican party from 1921 to 1932. There have always been men of high integrity and excellent executive ability in the republican party but the party has always been short on statesmanship and never more strikingly than during the period from 1921 to 1932. During this period the high command of the republican party steadfastly refused to see that the market for the 50 million acres which had been put into crops during the war had been destroyed by our sudden change from a debtor to a creditor nation. They refused to do anything to take this into account either by appropriate changes in tariff policy or by giving farmers centralizing power of government with which to retire gradually the acres producing stuff for a market which no longer existed.

The old dealers, because they never had any real sympathy for the farmers, anyway, would doubtless like to see the farmers in the United States harvesting their full 60 million acres of wheat, 105 million acres of corn, 41 million acres of cotton, and maintain the crop land acreage in the United States at the 370 million acre total of recent years. I am sure the old dealers would also like to see next year, as I know everyone else would, a return to normal or better than normal weather conditions. The battle cry of the old dealers, therefore, seems to be, "Pile up the surpluses again, but hold the tariff at a point which will make it impossible to dispose of the surplus on the world market." This is the plan which they followed from 1921 to 1932, and, judging from their statements, I would gather it is the plan they propose to follow again if the people of the United States give them an opportunity for mismanagement.

Undoubtedly, the drought in the far west and middlewest will make it necessary to change many of the agricultural programs for 1935. We have always figured that adjustments would be needed year by year—that is the reason we called it an Adjustment Act. Fortunately, the Agricultural Adjustment Act is adjustable and makes it possible to make such adjustments. As the drought increased during June, we made a number of these adjustments which made it possible to put the contracted acres into feed crops. It may be that certain acreage control programs will not be necessary at all in 1935, but with ordinary weather, the surplus will be such by the fall of 1935 that it will again be necessary to launch on a government loan campaign hooked up with acreage control for 1936.

In any event, no modification of the production control program would mean going backwards to the laissez faire basis on which farmers would be compelled to take what they could get for what crops they could raise, and would be denied the assistance of the Government in obtaining, farmer by farmer, an equitable return for their products. The contracts already in effect on cotton, wheat and tobacco, extend into and through the year 1935 and provide for benefit payments on 1935 harvests. Neither for these commodities nor for others, regardless of the revisions that may be made, will there be any abandonment of the principle of Governmental assistance to farmers in establishing the necessary balance between supply and demand, and giving just compensation for their co-operation.

It must be remembered that the surplus which piled up during the Hoover administration was not merely one of bushels and bales, but was also one of acres. The emergency will not be met until either the foreign market is restored or the surplus acres have been retired. Ordinary weather in 1935 and 1936 with no agricultural adjustment program will bring us right back to the 1932 situation. The Agricultural Adjustment Act is, after all, an adjustment act, not merely a reduction act. It was recognized from the beginning that the important thing was to make it possible for agricultural production to be adjusted to whatever situations might develop. Reduction was the first aim, because surpluses had accumulated. Every year's plan must be determined by what has gone before. The land is still here; it must be managed continually as a fundamental factor in the relationship between production and consumptive demand.
