State Crops Show Losses in All Groups

Parts of Northern Nebraska Show Good Fodder; Some Corn Harvested in Northeast.

Parts of northern Nebraska have a fair corn fodder crop and some corn for grain will be harvested in the extreme northeastern counties, irrigated sections and a few favored localities. The potato crop for the state is 50% below that of last year. The yield of sugar beets was lower than usual and the production was cut in half. Fruit production with the exception of pears is also below normal, says the State and Federal Division of Agricultural Statistics.

The estimated production of corn for all purposes is 25,659,000 bushels as compared to 234,698,000 bushels last year and the 5-year average of 230,002,000 bushels. The late season accompanied by fair rains improved the yield and quality of some of the corn fodder and corn for silage. The development of corn in western and northern Nebraska ended with the frost that came in late September. A general killing frost occurred in the latter part of October and ended corn development in the central and southeastern part of the state. Corn forage yields are extremely light except in northern Nebraska where yields are fair. Some corn is being husked in the extreme northeastern counties, but yields are extremely light. Corn is practically a total failure in the south central and southeastern part of the state.

Rains that fell about August 30 and afterwards gave early sown wheat a good start and it has made a splendid growth over most of the eastern third of the state. Conditions are not quite as favorable in the central and southwestern portion and are quite unfavorable in the extreme western Panhandle counties due to a shortage of moisture. The early sown wheat has made splendid growth in the eastern third of the state and much of it has been pastured. However, the sub-soil moisture is not ample and the crop cannot withstand prolonged periods of drought under this condition. Continued and plentiful rains with heavy snows would relieve the situation.

The average yield of potatoes is estimated at 20 bushels per acre and the production 4,320,000 bushels as compared with 8,625,000 bushels in 1933 and the 5-year average of 9,404,000 bushels. The farm crop is either extremely poor or a failure and the harvested acreage will be limited to a few favorable localities, irrigated valleys and sandhill area. Production in the central Platte valley is estimated at 200 bushels per acre or slightly more. The potato crop in the north Platte valley was seriously injured by the September frost and the yield in this territory probably will not exceed 125 bushels per acre. The dry land crop in western Nebraska is the poorest harvested in many years. Many fields were not worth harvesting and very few had yields as high as 50 bushels per acre. A total of 1,146 cars of potatoes have been shipped to date as compared to 2,731 cars shipped during the same period last year or about 40% as much.

Veteran Newspaper Man Tells of Home Town

Rush O. Fellows Tells of Experiences Here—Reviews Work of Dana Sleeth, Once Resident Here.

Seattle, Wash., Nov. 9. Editor Plattsmouth Journal, Plattsmouth, Nebraska.

Dear Sir: It may be that you will not be interested in the following, but every evening when I peruse the Seattle Daily Star, I inevitably think of the old town of Plattsmouth, where, seventy-six years ago I disembarked from a St. Louis steamboat at your then comparatively small town and trading point. That was during the summer of 1858 and I was all of six years old. My stay at that time was of but short duration and I was shipped back to my native state of Michigan. Again in 1873 I arrived in Plattsmouth and for seven years following I was an employe on the Weekly Herald during the management of Mr. and Mrs. John A. MacMurphy and it was during these years that I first met my late wife, leaving there in 1880. But in 1898, like the cat, I came back, started the Daily Post and after four years migrated to the Black Hills, hence you see there are three periods of the old town quite widely separated, whereof I recall many interesting events. Six years ago after the passing of my wife I came to this city to pass the remainder of my days, presumably, with my daughter and family.

But I digress; I had no intention when sitting down to this machine of giving you anything of my life's history, but rather to call your attention to the enclosed clippings, samples of items which appear in the paper above named. The nom de plume "Hill Billy" is that assumed by a former Plattsmouth boy, Mr. Dana Sleeth, son of Rev. Asa Sleeth who several years ago was pastor of the M. E. church in your city. The family will be remembered by many of the older residents thereabouts and they may perhaps be interested in knowing that the Reverend is still living, but in darkness, caused by eye failure. Mrs. Sleeth passed away a few months since as indicated by Dana's reference thereto, which shows the writer's philosophical method of mourning the demise of man's best friend:

FROM THE HILLS
By Hill Billy

Be sorrowful for the living, not the dead. Somehow that comes home to me just now more than ever before, and for years I have mourned for the beloved left behind, not for the poor tired bodies of the dead, lying there among the flowers and smiling the last smile that death imprints on the tired face.

A week ago I looked down at the face of mother in her humble casket. It seemed to me that mother looked at least 10 years younger than when a few days before, I had visited her in the hospital. Finally over the rough seas the ship at sunset comes to rest in a sweet harbor and the storms are forgotten.

This mother of mine was effective and happy until her last hour. At the age of 82 a "stroke" hit her as she was beginning her morning home tasks; she lingered for three weeks without regaining consciousness, slept without pain and without self-realization, as a tired baby sleeps, and then, on a quiet Sunday morning, at about the hour she would have arisen to begin her Christian services to her class and church, she quietly quit breathing.

I feel a loss, certainly, but I more deeply feel a satisfaction that mother to her last conscious hour lived without feeling of either pain or helplessness.

For mother I do not mourn; for father, left in the dark and alone, I do grieve. Of course, to me mother is as alive as she ever was, nor do I speak of the resurrection of the body, nor of a home in the skies. Mother lives within me, a conscious entity that we built up thru more than half a century of association; indeed in the very fibre of plasma of me my mother continues, as I continue in the fibre of my children.

There is an immortality, but not of the body entity.
Yours fraternally,
RUSH O. FELLOWS.

SUFFERS INJURED FOOT

Charles Forbes suffered a severe gash on his right foot Monday afternoon while he was engaged in cutting some wood at the family home. The ax with which he was splitting wood, glanced off and struck his instep and inflicted a very bad laceration and it was necessary to have several stitches taken in the injured foot. It will be necessary for the young man to get around with the use of crutches for some time.

Henry Vogler of Louisville, was in the city Wednesday for a few hours and while here was a caller at the Journal to renew his subscription to the semi-weekly edition of the paper.

Contains TETRAETHYL STANDARD RED CROWN SUPERFUEL No Extra Charge!

Motorists no longer have to guess about the gasoline they buy. A metal plaque on the pump, required by law, tells at a glance whether the gasoline contains tetraethyl, that amazing performance-producing compound also contained (in larger quantity) in premium-priced gasoline. All any motorist has to do is look for the plaque.

If it isn't there, then the gasoline hasn't a single drop of that valuable fluid in it! For this reason, thousands of car owners make it a point to buy Standard Red Crown, the Live Power gasoline, which sells at the price of "regular." They know that that plaque is on every Red Crown pump!

THE DOCTOR BEATS THE STORK . . .

YOU THINK ALL GASOLINES ARE ALIKE? HOW COME THEY DON'T ALL HAVE THAT PLAQUE ON THE PUMP, THEN?

HERE'S WHERE TO GET IT!
