THINKS WAR LURKS AHEAD

London.—David Lloyd George, Britain's wartime premier, told an audience at an exhibition of gruesome wartime photographs that a wager on the probability of war would be an expensive proposition.

"If you want to know whether there is any danger," he said, "go to Lloyds and ask what it would cost you for a policy insuring against the risk of war for five years."

He said he was not among those who considered war as imminent, but said it was "lurking in the path along which humanity has got to tread," and intimated that it would be impossible to get insurance against war occurring within ten years.

REPUDIATES GUILTY PLEAS

Omaha.—Henry Hawk, who holds law degrees from schools of three state prisons, will put his education to a test with the maximum penalty forty-seven years if he flunks.

He changed his mind Thursday on pleading guilty to auto theft charges carrying five year penalties on each of nine counts. He also repudiated a plea of guilty made earlier to conspiracy charges, carrying a two year penalty. He intends to call in a local attorney for consultation to refresh his legal knowledge.
