Urge Soybeans for Use on Idle Corn Acreage

Rich Foliage Crop Will Grow Where Clover and Alfalfa Will Not Says Agronomist.

Growing of soybeans on "idle acres" under the 1935 corn-hog program or planting on alfalfa land failing to produce a stand is practical in southeastern Nebraska, P. H. Stewart, extension agronomist at the college of agriiulture, believes.

"Without doubt, many farmers now are wondering what to do with this land," Stewart says, "They do not want to put excessive acres to small grains which are high in price and will probably want to try soybeans which are grown quite successfully in other states."

Soybeans are tolerant of an acid soil and can be grown in sections where clover and alfalfa fail to produce a satisfactory stand. Chinch bugs do not bother them. Seed is also available for spring planting. Some farmers in the southeastern section have tried the beans in the past few years.

Altho the beans are not a major crop in Nebraska, some work has been done with the crop at the experiment station. Results showed the crop would yield about 15 to 20 bushels grain per acre, and about one to one and a half tons of hay. Most farmers grow the crop for hay and but few for seed.

The length of the growing season of soybeans varies considerably. The earliest varieties usually mature even in northwestern Nebraska. Soybeans are rather drouth resistant and could be grown more extensively in the drier sections were it not for the fact that rabbits are very fond of them and are apt to do considerable damage, especially to small Flood Waters Continue to Rise in best on good corn soils. Trials by farmers indicate when they are grown alone they do well on sandy soils bordering the sandhil region.

In general, the seedbed preparation for beans is the same as for corn, too early, they may be damaged by late spring frosts while if planted mated 75 percent of the livestock too late they are not likely to ma-
