Democrats to Insist on Getting More Patronage

Members of House of Representatives at Washington Find Ally in Senator Robinson.

The members of the national house of representatives at Washington, members of the democratic party have long felt that the patronage of the national administration was not divided as it should be among the members of their party.

The democrats have found an ally in Senator Joe Robinson of Arkansas, senate leader, who stated: "I unhesitatingly say," he told the senate, "that the present administration has kept in office too many republicans too long. If I chose to go into details I could name hundreds of old mossback republicans placed in office by that great partisan associate of the senator from Delaware, former Senator Smoot, (r. Utah)."

His statement was precipitated by comment from Senator Hastings, (r. Del.), that Speaker Byrns had informed a caucus of house democrats that at least 10,000 jobs in the civilian conservation corps would be distributed to "deserving" democrats. Earlier, Byrns explained he had said only that that many positions would be available. House democrats promptly began efforts to obtain them for constituents.

Senator Long (d. La.), said he "agreed" with Robinson that "democrats should get all the jobs." "I am not so strong that democrats should get all the jobs," the democratic leader replied, "but they ought to have most of them. The senator from Louisiana and I are nearer in accord at this moment than we've been in a long time."

Long protested that under what he understood to be Byrns' announcement the jobs would be given out by house members and not senators. "None of us are to be allowed to come up to the pie counter, that's what I'm kicking about," he said.

In discussing the $4,500,000,000 work and relief bill, Hastings said the funds were intended to be used to take care of those now on relief rolls, "but before the bill gets thru the senate we find the speaker announcing 10,000 democrats are to be taken care of."

Senator Borah repeated his contention of several months ago that there was a "vast amount of politics and waste" in the distribution of relief funds and suggested the committee report out a "specific method" for distributing the new funds.

From Saturday's Daily H. A. Tool of Mudock, was a visitor in the city today to look after some matters of business and also visiting with his many friends.

Bindweed Seed Found in Much of Small Grain

Infested Seed Is a Source of Danger to Grain, D. L. Gross, Agronomist Points Out.

Small grain harvested from bindweed infested fields is nearly certain to carry bindweed seed, and as a result agronomists believe farmers should be sure their seed bought for Spring planting is free from such noxious weeds.

D. L. Gross, extension agronomist at the college of agriculture, points to many examples of how bindweed, one of the worst weed pest known in the state, spreads rapidly. On one farm in Saline county where a recent weed meeting was held, a 52-acre field was a solid mat of bindweed. This field had become infested in one year thru seeding of bindweed infested sweet clover seed.

An indication of prolific seeding habit of the pest is shown in an instance in York county. A bushel of wheat was caught as it came from a thrashing machine operated in a bindweed infested field, a sample was taken and the bindweed seed counted. There were more than 26,000 in this one bushel alone. Yet, Gross points out, such infested wheat is often used for seed on land free from bindweed. "The spread of the bindweed has been particularly rapid during the past two years, since it seems to thrive well and produce large quantities of seed during dry years," the agronomist says, "This is doubly unfortunate this year, since most farmers in Nebraska have no seed oats and barley and will need to buy seed this Spring to plant their crops. Farmers who are acquainted with the grave danger of introducing bindweed into their farms will be very cautious in buying any kind of seed."

URGES LIBERAL LIQUOR LAW

A liberal liquor law was recommended to Nebraska legislators Friday by Edward A. Hayes of Decatur, Ill., former national commander of the American Legion.

Speaking before the liquor committee of the house of representatives, he said liberalized private sale of liquor was the only way to eliminate the bootlegger. Hayes advised strict rules as to qualifications of respectability for licenses and as to enforcement of the law, but warned against other restrictions which might cause high prices for liquor.

Hayes said he was making a tour of several states and was interested in seeing sensible liquor legislation.
