from year to year. Hardly a man in the state will say that the recent corn loan did not do a lot of good. Everyone recognizes the need for more carryover of not only corn but other livestock feed.

Amendments to the adjustment act are being supported by eastern producers interested in marketing agreements and by middle western farmers interested in the loan and other features of the adjustment programs.

Feeding Test Results. That tankage can serve as a protein supplement in feeding all forms of livestock is indicated in results of experimental tests conducted at the University of Nebraska college of agriculture during the past few months.

Even though grainless silage was used, the gains and resulting economy of gains were quite satisfactory. Daily gains made by cottonseed, tankage and cube-fed steers were 1.46 pounds, 1.52 pounds and 1.34 pounds respectively.

The first attempt to use tankage in the cattle ration experimentally was made at the Nebraska experiment station in 1924 and the 1935 results are expected to be watched closely by all livestock interests.

teeth, they may be weak, poorly developed or crooked, without good strong enamel, and more likely to decay. Over and over, dentists and nutritionists have checked decay in a child's teeth by giving the child more of the foods rich in tooth-making materials.

Calcium and phosphorus are not the whole story. They furnish the building material but only some of the building crew have arrived with the milk, and without a good force of vitamins on the job, the work will not be properly done.

For vitamin C we turn to the citrus fruits (orange, grapefruit, lemons, tangerines) and tomatoes. To make sure the child has enough vitamin C, give him at least 2 table-spoons of orange juice every day, or twice that much tomato juice. If he is old enough to eat chopped raw vegetables, as salads or sandwich fillings, or raw fruits of any kind, he will get some vitamin C this way and do with less orange or tomato juice.

With plenty of milk, plenty of tomato, orange, lemon or grapefruit juice, and cod-liver oil besides, not forgetting also plenty of play in the sunshine, the child has a good start in life so far as his bones and teeth are concerned. To round out his diet and fortify his growing body in every way as much as food can do it, give him also other vegetables and fruits, along with plenty of bread and cereals, for only in variety can he get all the body-building and protective protein, minerals and vitamins, and the energy-giving carbohydrates and fats required for healthy growth and development.

DEFENSE OF MOTOR EXPORTS. New York.—Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., president of General Motors corporation, defended in a statement the growing increase of automobile exports, and denied any attempt to limit them as a possible means for boosting cotton sales abroad.

Entertained for Guests. The Avoca Women's club entertained as their guests for an afternoon tea last Monday the members of the club at Union. A worth while program had been arranged for the occasion and was most enjoyable time.

It is a signal honor indeed and one greatly appreciated by teachers, pupils and patrons of the schools.

The sport fans of Avoca and vicinity have been busy the past fortnight and as a result of their efforts have been successful in raising the required $185 with which to have flood lights installed on the ball diamond, so night games can be played here as well as in a number of our neighboring towns already thus equipped. A good team will be recruited and we may expect to see some closely contested games this summer.
