Grapevine Brings Story of Cass County Pioneer

Vine at Home of Mrs. A. D. Asch Planted by Her Father 75 Years Ago, Still Bearing Heavily.

In the Lincoln Star of Sunday appeared a very interesting article by Hazel Baier, member of the staff of that paper and which covers a story of a Cass county lady and a historic grapevine on her farm. The article follows:

"In 1860 a pioneer planted a grape vine on his farm at the edge of the blue bluffs overlooking the Missouri river in the Lewiston settlement about three miles southeast of the present village of Murray. Today the vine has two branches which spread twenty-five feet and a third reaching the length of twenty-three feet. Its main trunk has grown in circumference to fifteen inches. It serves its proud owner with two crops of grapes each year for her gleaming jelly glasses.

"Mrs. Angel Dove Asch objected to a picture of herself and the vine, saying, 'Do you think I want to have my picture taken with something that old?' then laughing, she added, 'Well, let me tell you, I'm older than that vine. I'll be seventy-seven this summer.'

"Watches Vine Carefully. 'She lives alone on the farm her father purchased in 1859 and has watched the careful pruning of the vine since childhood. She now cares for it as carefully as did her father. A framework has followed the vine's growth to uphold its burden of fruit. 'The branches are now laden with heavily scented blossoms—a promise of the coming harvest. But this is not the only harvest of grapes, for after all other vines have considered their summer work finished, this old sturdy plant brings forth a second crop for its mistress. She picks baskets for her own use and gives the lovely fruit to friends who drop in to see her.

"The Wiley family came to this farm from Gadsden, Ala., before the Civil war and started the vine on their farm in the sparsely settled Nebraska territory. Its growth and productivity probably served as encouragement for the farmers who planted the vineyards that now spread over the steep hills bordering the Missouri in the southeast corner of the state."
