Cass Wheat May be Damaged 50 Per Cent

Farmers Are Worried by Rust as the Damp Weather Continues in State.

Farmers in sections of eastern Nebraska examined wheat fields apprehensively for signs of further black rust following soaking rains Sunday. Heavy rains were reported in parts of Cass county. Weeping Water creek boiled from its banks. Plattsmouth reported .68 of an inch and Union received 1.5 inches within a 30-minute period.

Spotted rains fell over other sections of southeastern Nebraska. A violent electrical storm and driving wind accompanied the rain.

Rains of cloudburst proportions were received in western part of the state over the week end. A detour has been established three miles east of Gering on highway No. 86, then south three miles and west to No. 29.

The winds which accompanied rains in east Nebraska laid much wheat on the ground, adding to damage from that caused. W. B. Banning, state director of agriculture, returned from Cass county with a report that a fifty mile gale had caused 50 percent damage to grain crops in that country and a small adjoining area.

A. E. Anderson, state and federal crop statistician, declined to estimate the extent to which Nebraska's wheat crop may be damaged by rust.

"In fact, no one can tell until the harvest is well under way just what the damage will be in this state," Anderson said.

Wants Better Bridge.
A. L. Becker was looking after some business matters in Plattsmouth last Tuesday, meeting with the board of county commissioners regarding getting some understanding about a crossing which is desired to the big woods which Mr. Becker owns over on the river where the stone is being quarried and hauled away by the companies working the quarries. The bridge which he had constructed there was washed out by the heavy rains. He had in mind going to the bottom of the creek where there is a solid stone strata and then building grade to the solid rock, but the task is quite expensive and as the general public is to benefit, Mr. Becker thinks the county should stand some of the expense.

Visiting in Omaha Monday.

On last Monday Mesdames A. L. Becker, W. H. Porter and Joseph Banning, all sisters and Mary Becker went to Omaha where they were visiting for the day and as well looking after some shopping.

Has some 25 Foxes.
A. L. Becker in his hinder woods near where the stone is now being quarried on his lands, stacked a stack of straw last year and left it there. Lately he has found in this harbor he had some twenty-five or more red foxes and they have the stack of straw honeycombed and are happy in their home there. A party suggested killing them by shooting, but Mr. Becker says no, they are my foxes and I have a right to protect them as much as any other farmer has his sheep, hogs, cattle or fowl. These foxes are an asset and he has as much right to them and to grow them and allow them to multiply on his land as any one has hogs, cattle or horses and there is not a fox code to compel him to cut off twenty or twenty-five per cent and who ever gets after them will have to account to Mr. Becker.

Bible School Lesson Study!

Sunday, July 7th By L. Neitzel, Murdock, Neb.

"Moses" (Leader and Lawgiver)
Exodus 24:3-8; 12-18.

This third quarter of 1935 is devoted to representative men and women of the Bible. The aim is, through a study of the lives of some men and women of the Bible, to discover the source of their spiritual power, to share their experiences, and to receive guidance for our own living. The greatest of all men born of woman, in the Old Testament, covering a period of nearly four thousand years of history, is certainly Moses, the deliverer and lawgiver of Israel. Excluding the Lord Jesus, he was the greatest character of all religious history next to the Apostle Paul.

A fascinating study of this great man are his character, his relationship to God, the influences which molded his life, the crises of his life, and how they were met, his journeys, Moses as an orator, Moses as a statesman, Moses as a prophet, Moses as a man of prayer, Moses as a type of Christ. His father's name was Amram, his mother's Jochebed, both from the tribe of Levi. Born in slavery, 1572 B. C., the hand of Jehovah was extended over this unusual child, his preservation, his adoption by the daughter of the King of Egypt, the thorough training for leadership (in all the "wisdom of the Egyptians," Acts 7:22, make up the first forty years of his life. But, with all this, he remained at heart a Hebrew, thanks to his mother's early training. His second period of life is called the "period of discipline." He found a home with a priest in Median, Jethro, a man of singular attractiveness and strength, with a deeply religious spirit and wise judgment, all met in a happy combination. Moses married Jethro's daughter, Zipporah, which proved not to be a happy life. She was not in full sympathy with Moses, and caused him much grief. Two boys came to this home, Gershom and Eliezer.

For forty years, Moses roamed over and in the Sinai wilderness; in solitude of the desert he walks with God, and his fiery temper undergoes a change—tending sheep requires patience. That was his second semester in school.

It seems that, whenever God has had need of a great man for a great work, he withdrew him for a while into the solemn sanctuary of the desert—David, Elijah, Amos, John, the Baptist, and Paul, are some.

Here in the desert he had the experience of his life—he met God. It was here he received the call for his life's work—being then 80 years old. Eighty years of schooling were required for the stupendous task. To mould some 2,000,000 people, with no schooling and no government of their own, only the cruel Egyptian taskmaster to lord it over them—was more than any ordinary man could undertake, realizing that he raises four questions, to wit: (1) He has no fame or power to deal with Pharaoh. God said He would go with him; (2) Israel would ask who sent him; "I am that I am" must suffice; (3) The people would not believe Moses—his credentials are his staff, it becomes a serpent, his land leprous. (4) He is not eloquent—no public speaker; so Aaron is given him as companion.

The third period of forty years finds him as deliverer and lawgiver. The greatest work of this remarkable man is, after bringing the Israelites out of Egypt, to give them the Law to govern their conduct towards God and their fellow men. It is well to study the awe-inspiring scenes that accompanied this event.

Great preparations were made. An altar was built—which represented God; twelve pillars—unhewn stone—were set up around the Altar, which represented the twelve tribes of Israel. A burnt sacrifice was prepared and the blood was caught up in vessels—the blood of the covenant—half of it sprinkled on the altar, the other half on the people (or on the twelve pillars that represented the people?). Both parties binding themselves and sealing the compact with blood. The covenant is read by Moses and the people said: "All that Jehovah hath spoken will be done and be obedient."

The second act in the drama follows: Moses is ordered to come up into the Mount. He is with God forty days and nights, in the cloud. Clouds play a great part in the economy of God. (a) God's covenant concerning the rainbow, Gen. 9:13-16; (b) God leading Israel with a pillar of a cloud, Ex. 13:21-22; (c) A cloud resting on the Holy of Holies; (d) Jesus went home in a cloud; (e) and will come again in a cloud.

Moses brings the two tables of stone, made and inscribed with the ten commandments—a law never amended, never repealed, perfect, and for all men and for all time.

Another forty year period is ended. Moses, now 120 years old, turns the leadership over to Joshua, who is well prepared to carry the work on. Moses' spiritual power came through his intimate acquaintance with God, and a life of prayer. He prayed for the presence of God (Ex. 33:11-14). He asked for divine help to govern the people (Numbers 11:11-15); that Miriam might be healed from leprosy (Num. 12:13).

"The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." (John 1:17).
