How is This for Yield

Well, we had a fine prospect for a wheat crop and then along came red rust and black stem rust, winds and heavy rain, blowing the wheat over and tangling it up pretty badly and we were all scared fearing the wheat crop was all wiped out (and some of it was pretty badly damaged and the yield has been small). But last Friday some four acres of the 35-acre field on the farm of Ray Chriswiser, was combined and showed a yield of 34 1/2 bushels to the acre. The work was pushed forward and when the entire field of 35 acres had been harvested, it was found the delivery to the elevator reached 1,091 bushels, or 31 and 11/35 bushels to the acre, which is certainly not bad with the black stem rust lurking in every corner of the field, looking for a poor, unprotected wheat straw to jump on.

Do not get the idea all wheat is returning a yield like this, however. Over near Avoca, where some of the new crop has been threshed, it was found that the yield was only slightly over 15 bushels per acre and the grain tested but 58 pounds, for a No. 2 grading, but still far from being as bad as it might have been.
