A REFUGE

There are chords of love through which music flows,
But mortals seem oblivious to the direction it goes,
Or whether the strings of the lyre are rightly tuned,
To harmonize with the ear perfectly groomed.

It is safe to presume that as mortals translate,
The streams of thought that predominate,
And intercept the good that should abound,
And let man's ambition rise above ground.

The leaves of the forest wither and fade,
While the thoughts of mortals stay below grade,
Since Life's eternal streams thus give food and drink,
And save from the pit those ready to sink.

The citadel of thought may be bombarded with "grape,"
And as the cannonading goes on, a white flag of truce,
Be hoisted over the ramparts that now remain
A part of the works that has stood such a strain.

A feeble approach to the beautiful isle
Finds it deserted; but ready with a smile,
To lift the turbulent out of his incipient desire
To withhold the harmony from the world's great lyre.

As great nations and men sail the high seas of life,
They find them turbulent and full of strife,
Their cry goes out to find an immutable haven of rest,
Where security and trust linger within the breast.

Where shall we go when all seems to be lost;
But directly to the Omnipotent without figuring the cost.
There is no other haven for the ship in the storm,
Though the breakers are rough, it becomes placid in form.
—J. R. Tremble.

Second Action for Salaries is Indicated Soon

Judge Day of Supreme Court, Gets Warrant for Salary Turned Down by Treasurer.

A second action to test the validity of the law passed by the 1933 legislature reducing the salaries of all executive state officers and judges of the supreme court and district courts was foreshadowed Saturday when Judge L. B. Day of the supreme court presented to State Treasurer Hall a warrant for the amount of salary due him under the old law, and was refused payment. Auditor Price had agreed to issue the warrant with the understanding in advance that the treasurer would refuse payment, this being necessary as a basis of the new action.

Judge Day was re-elected last year from the Omaha district as a member of the supreme court or lowered during the term for and with two other members of the court would, under the new salary law, draw $5,200 a year while the other members of the court would draw during the remainder of their terms the old salary of $7,500 a year, this latter fact being established by a previous court decision to the effect that a salary could not be raised which the person was elected.

Judge Day declined to say what he proposed to do, but lawyers around the state house expressed the opinion that it indicated a new action based on different pleadings and issues than the case now before the supreme court, initiated by State Superintendent Taylor, and which is to be reargued Sept. 16. At the time of the argument the state's attorney put forward the proposition that the law could be distinguished as between those public officers who are members of a court or commission where a cut would produce varying salaries for men doing the same duties, as supreme court, railway commission and board of control.

One issue not raised in the original suit is regarded by some as important, and may be raised in the new action. The supreme court years ago ruled that when the constitution fixed salaries the officers included need not even file claims nor need there be a direct appropriation by the legislature. The lawyers say this was equivalent to saying that the constitution made a continuing appropriation, and that as all appropriation bills must originate in the house the salary cut law was invalid because it originated in the senate.

The Welch salary reduction bill, enacted during the depth of the depression in the spring of 1933, sliced off more than $200,000 biennially from the payrolls of state officers. It was resisted strenuously by state officials who were successful in deferring until Jan. 1, 1935. This delay was effected by a supreme court ruling that the legislature could take no action to modify salaries of elective officers during their regime.

BLACK HOLE OF CALCUTTA OUTRAGE SHOWN IN FILM

The black crime of the Black Hole of Calcutta is brought to light on the screen for the first time in "Clive of India," featuring Ronald Colman in the star role. This great picture, secured by special arrangement, is being shown Friday and Saturday nights of this week at the Ritz theatre in Plattsmouth.

Not even the Bastille of France or the Tower of London housed greater horror than that infamous cell, some 18 feet square, into which, on June 20, 1756, in the city of Calcutta, India, one hundred and forty-five men and one woman were crammed by the soldiers of a cruel potentate and left to die in a night of hideous suffering. You can see this picture Friday and Saturday nights at the Ritz' regular low week-end admission price of 10 and 25 cents. Cool, comfortable opera chair seats!

Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, the feature picture will be "Star of Midnight," featuring William Powell and Ginger Rogers. It is a type of role ideally suited to Powell, that in which he has won his greatest fame, that of a suave and brilliant attorney who becomes involved in the solution of a baffling mystery. Miss Rogers is seen in a distinctly new characterization as a romantic girl who plays "Watson" to Powell's "Holmes" in running down clues to the mystery solution.

It was an address that was very much enjoyed.

Despite the heat the members enjoyed their songs under the leadership of George Jaeger to add to the interest of the meeting.

E. H. Rholes of Miami, Ohio, was a guest of the club, being en route to Des Moines for a visit and thence with his family to the Minnesota lakes for an outing.

BONDS ARE LOST

The voters of Union Tuesday were called at a special election to vote the sum of $7,000 for the erection of an auditorium and gymnasium as a part of the present high school building.
