W. B. BANNING QUITS; 'I'LL SAY PLENTY' LATER

Lincoln, Neb., May 25.—W. B. Banning of Union stepped down today from the state agriculture director's position with the parting statement he would "be heard from yet." He was succeeded by Louis Buchholz of Barada.

"As soon as the auditors complete their study of the department," Banning asserted, "I will have plenty to say in answer to all this criticism that was made about collection of back gasoline taxes and other administration acts. Until then I'll confine my activities to raising apples on my orchard near Union."

Before relinquishing the post, however, Banning gave a report on the gas tax collections the last two months. The April total, he said, was $810,713, while that for March was $614,908. The March decline was due, he said, to the "last of the four-cent tax collections," made during the 24 days the legislature spent in trying to agree on how the fifth cent should be distributed.

Bible School Lesson Study!

Sunday, May 30th By L. Neitzel, Murdock, Neb.

"The Remaking of Jacob"

Gen. 28:15-22; 32:24-30.

Man as born, God cannot use in his service. He has to make him over. Man has to become as clay in the Potter's hand—non-resisting—not opposing, hindering; to be used as the Potter sees fit (See Isa. 45:9; 29:16; Jer. 18:1-4). Jacob by nature was given to lying, cheating and questionable dealings. God could not use him as the bearer of the blessings of the world without remaking him. "This also applies to every man. "Except ye are born again . . . man is not fit for the service of God. (1 Cor. 2:14). Before Jacob becomes a "prince of God," he must go through a school of severe experiences. Obtaining Esau's birthright in a "cheap" way and getting the blessing by "fraud," was followed by Esau's anger and threat of murder, and the consequence was his leaving of home and flight to Haran, the old home of Abraham and his mother, Rebekah, whom he never saw again. His experience at Bethel—"house of God"—made a deep impression on him, which he never forgot. Overtaken by night before he could get to a shelter, he makes camp in the open—there alone with God, who visited him in a dream, such as Job experienced. (Job 33:13-18). Jacob receives God's assurance that he will go with him and bring him safely back. We do not approve Jacob's bargaining with God; at this time he should have trusted God implicitly. Much in Jacob's life is objectionable like in David's, which God did not approve, but punished severely; still they were his children and he rather pitied them. (Ps. 104:13). Jacob's dream ladder was for him a bridge between earth and heaven. Every Christian should have a Bethel, where he can talk
