Laughing Around the World With IRVIN S. COBB

A Six-Legged Camel At That!

By IRVIN S. COBB THERE was a ship which had a captain who was by way of being somewhat of a wag. It plied in tropical waters, this ship; and in time, acquired a good many small dwellers that were not on the passenger list or the crew-roster. Let us call them for convenience, fleas.

Many of them undoubtedly were fleas. Or one voyage of this populous steamer a young lady traveler approached the captain as they were nearing the equator. "Oh, captain," she said, "I'm just dying to see the equator. I always thought it was a clear day. Is it?" "It is," said the captain; "in fact, it is now visible through a strong glass. You wait here a moment."

He went to his stateroom and got his binoculars. As he was on his way back to her he plucked a sandy hair from his head and stretched it across the lens. He handed the instrument, thus decorated, to the lady. She put it up to her eyes and looked at the horizon ahead, according to the skipper's instructions.

"If you see a reddish wavy line that's the equator," said the captain. "Oh, goodness," gurgled the lady. "I can see it just as plain as anything! And oh, captain, there's a camel crossing it!"

Discover Plant Which Repels Insect Pests

Free Seeds To Be Available of the Unique Tropic Growth—Common to Natives.

GULFPORT, Miss. (UP)—Here's something to mark on your calendar! Starting next month—October 1—the seeds of a plant which actually repels common insects will be distributed throughout the United States, free of charge, by the Pan American Society of Tropical Research, Gulfport, Miss.

Captain J. Mortimer Sheppard, head of the society, first happened on this unusual plant—"Yerba De La Pulga" is its name—while traveling through the interior of the Republic of Colombia. Captain Sheppard, who has more than a half dozen journeys through the jungles of Central and South American countries to his credit, thought he had discovered something new. But he soon learned that it was a common sight to the natives, who placed these plants at advantageous spots about their huts for protection against flies and mosquitoes.

The captain's original plan was to grow the plants, pot them and put them on the market in the United States. The financial possibilities were tremendous. But after considering the humanitarian aspect, he decided to distribute the seeds of the Yerba De La Pulga gratis.

According to Captain Sheppard, one plant placed in each room of a house is sufficient to ward off insects. Each person requesting these seeds will be sent, on receipt of a stamped self-addressed envelope, four of them, with instructions about planting and soil treatment.

Obviously, this plant will be a godsend to the many hospitals, cafes, hotels, not to mention private dwellings.

Many Paying Up Back Taxes Now

Cass County Residents Finding Big Saving by Taking Advantage of Legislative Bill No. 1

County Treasurer John E. Turner advises the Journal a large number of Cass county residents who have heretofore been unable to take care of taxes during the last few depression years, are now coming in and paying up their delinquencies and saving the interest on them from the date they became delinquent up to March 19 of this year, when the non-interest, non-penalty tax law was passed.

Some people have been under the impression that the law—Legislative Bill No. 1—cancels all interest to date of payment, but that is not correct. The bill provides only for cancellation of interest due at the time the law was passed, March 19. It further provides that the cancellation is only temporary and that if delinquent taxes are not paid by December 31, 1938, they revert to their original status quo, and the treasurer must then collect for all interest and penalties that the bill removes temporarily.

The non-interest, non-penalty law was passed merely as a relief measure to enable those behind with their taxes to clear them up with as little interest as possible, so the legislature saw fit to make its provisions inoperative after December 31, 1938, when accumulated interest goes back as it was prior to the passing of the bill.

Incidentally, the sooner delinquencies are paid, the less interest, for already approximately a half year's interest has piled up anew since the law canceled back interest.

It is expected many more—perhaps nearly all—delinquent taxes will be collected by the time the law expires on December 31, 1938, for it affords a wonderful opportunity for those back in taxes to "get out from under" the interest.

The rate of interest being charged on these accounts from March 19 to date of payment is 7% per annum, the same as has been charged the past few years on all delinquent taxes. By paying now, one can avert having this new interest pile up on his tax obligation.

The Journal publishes today ad No. 6 in the series explaining the new law, which is sponsored jointly by the County Commissioners and the City Council.
