

Speaks on the Mountain People of Southland

Dr. Paul Doran of Sparta, Tennessee, is Speaker at the First Presbyterian Church.

Friday evening a covered dish supper was held at the Fellowship room of the First Presbyterian church that preceded a very fine address by Dr. Paul Doran, of Sparta, Tennessee, who was representing the national board of missions of the church.

Dr. Doran gave a fine address on the conditions in the Cumberland mountain area, the people and their reaction to the missionary work, there being mission schools there of the Presbyterian, Episcopal and Congregational churches.

These people, Dr. Doran pointed out, came from the Scotch-Irish stock that had first settled in the Carolinas and later had migrated to the mountains of North Carolina and Tennessee and where their descendants now lived.

With the disaster of the Civil war and the dark days of the reconstruction years, the educational systems had broken down through lack of backing and caused only the most crude schools to exist with many unable to attend.

One of the movements sought was that of having their native workers carry on the schools and missions among their own people.

The speaker urged the assistance of the church in this field of home missions and which would produce great results for the nation.

Bible School Lesson Study!

Sunday, November 7th By L. Neitzel, Murdock, Neb.

Christian Character and Peace

Col. 3:1-17. No teacher without a deep and vital experience can stand before a class and speak about the "old" and "new" life that Paul, the writer, says "is hid with Christ in God."

This is holy ground. The teaching of this lesson should lead every scholar to ask God to take out of his or her life what belongs to the old life, and to make manifest what belongs clearly to the new life in Christ. No other epistle in the New Testament presents Christ so constantly as meeting all the needs of men as does this one.

Paul tries to make Christ pre-eminent in the lives of Christ's followers. Spurgeon once said this passage (of our lesson) "begins in heaven and ends in the kitchen," meaning that it is full of spiritual truths that concern matters of everyday experiences in the world in which we live.

Power District to Halt Lines in Cass County

Twelve to Fourteen Miles of Transmission Lines Stopped in "Gentleman's Agreement."

LINCOLN, Nov. 2 (UP)—A "gentleman's agreement" today apparently had ended the empass between the Eastern Nebraska Public Power district and the Nebraska Power company of Omaha.

The districts board of directors in their monthly meeting yesterday approved a resolution eliminating 12 to 14 miles of proposed rural transmission line in Cass county in return for assurances from the private power company that it would dismiss its supreme court action staying all work in the district.

In discarding the dozen miles of line which the Nebraska Power company contended would double part of its system, the directors heeded the advice of their attorneys, Charles A. Dafoe of Tecumseh and Robert Van Pil of Lincoln. Dafoe told the board elimination of the disputed line was the proper way to avoid litigation.

Roy Page, general manager of the private utility and Ralph E. Svoboda, company attorney, were to confer with representatives of the public power district over settlement of the litigation at the state railway commission office here today.

The board also tabled a motion presented by Director George Craven of Lincoln at a previous meeting which would terminate the employment of all directors by the district and replace them with a "skilled public power expert."

The district's legal staff stated in an opinion that no section of the Nebraska statutes or any rules of the REA would prohibit employment of relatives by the district.

DENTISTRY and PUBLIC HEALTH Approved by American Dental Association and the United States Public Health Service PLATTSMOUTH DENTAL SOCIETY

CHAPTER XXXI Little Carl was deplorably sick. The left side of his face was badly swollen; the glands in his neck were sore and distended. He was feverish, fretful, and felt miserable. A deep dull throbbing pain emanated from his lower jaw and seemed to end somewhere near the top of his head.

After waiting for a few moments in the reception room, Carl and his mother were ushered into Dr. Young's office.

"I'll say you have a sick boy," said the dentist to Mrs. Knight as he glanced at Carl's face.

Carl hung back. "I don't want it pulled out," he cried.

"Don't worry, old timer," said the dentist. "I'm going to pull it out, but I don't want to look at it and try to do something to stop the pain."

After a few moments inspection of Carl's mouth, Dr. Young said: "That tooth is so badly abscessed, I'm afraid we will have to remove it. However, we must get the infection out of his gums and cheek before we can do any extracting."

The swollen, red, and inflamed gums indicated that the abscess was "pointing," or coming to a head, near the offending tooth and that it was ready to be opened. A few inhalations of nitrous oxide put Carl to sleep. During his slumber, the dentist lanced the gum, which allowed the pus to drain. In a very few seconds, Carl revived and climbed out of the chair somewhat relieved, although far from cured. Dr. Young then gave Mrs. Knight some instructions for Carl's care.

"As soon as you get home," he said, "give Carl a warm bath and an enema. Keep him in bed for at least the next twenty-four hours. He probably will not be hungry, but see that he has plenty of nourishment in the form of liquid and soft foods. Bread and milk for breakfast, some custard and a glass of milk for lunch, and a bowl of broth and crackers, and perhaps a poached egg, for dinner. See that he drinks plenty of liquids. Give him plenty of water or lemonade during the day; they will help reduce the swelling. Place cold cloths on his swollen cheek, and keep him as quiet as possible for the next twenty-four hours. By that time I am sure both the swelling and his temperature will be reduced. Call me tomorrow afternoon and let me know how he is progressing. Let me see him day after tomorrow. By that time, if the infection has subsided, we will remove the tooth. Otherwise, we will wait a few days until it has subsided. Carl has several more teeth that should be treated before they abscess as this one did. Abscessed teeth are a distinct menace to child health. I would advise you to have them cared for at once.

"I want them repaired just as quickly as possible," said Mrs. Knight. "Poor boy, I don't want him to go through another siege like this again."
