CHAPTER XXXVIII

"I'm sending Jack to summer camp next Monday," said Mrs. Reynolds to Dr. Young, "and I want to be sure that his teeth are in perfect condition before he goes."
"Barring accidents," replied the dentist, "Jack should have no trouble with his teeth while in camp. He has no cavities and now that I've cleaned them thoroughly, he has no deposits or stains on them." Turning to Jack, he said, "But remember, you must keep them brushed twice a day. Can you do that when you are on vacation?"
"I'll have to," answered Jack. "That's one of the things they check up on in camp. Gee, they're more strict in camp than at home."
"Is that so?" asked the dentist. "In that case, you'd probably rather stay at home."
"No sir!" said Jack emphatically. "I want to go to camp this year. You see," he continued, "I've spent the last two summers in camp and I'm sure to be a squad leader this year."
"What does a squad leader do?" asked the dentist.
"Oh, he has to see that the other fellows in his squad do what they're supposed to do—like shining their shoes and making their beds and keeping things clean."
"I see," replied the dentist. "What about personal cleanliness—bathing and combing the hair and changing clothes and brushing the teeth? Does the squad leader have to check on those items also?"
"Sure," replied Jack. "Sometimes the fellows don't like it at first, but they soon get used to it."
"Supposing," said Dr. Young, "I give you a printed set of toothbrushing instructions. Would that help you teach some of your friends how to brush their teeth?"
"That would be swell," replied Jack. "I'd give one to each fellow in my squad, and after they had learned them, maybe we'd get special recognition from the captain."
"Here," said Dr. Young, "are enough leaflets for every boy in your squad. If you want more, write me and I'll be glad to send them to you."

This is what the leaflet said:
THE KIND OF TOOTHBRUSH TO USE
To brush the teeth properly, one should use the right kind of toothbrush. Everyone should own at least two toothbrushes. He should use one in the morning and the other one in the evening. When the brushes are alternated, the bristles of each brush are allowed to dry and regain their stiffness before they are again used.
A good toothbrush is one that contains five to seven rows of bristles. The tufts of bristles should be set far enough apart so that they can be easily kept clean. The ends of the bristles should be of uneven length so that they will fit into the spaces between the teeth. The bristles should be strong and stiff enough to remove all the food particles from between the teeth, and yet they should not be so stiff and harsh that they will bruise or cut the gums.
WHERE TO KEEP THE TOOTHBRUSH
After a toothbrush is used, it should be thoroughly cleaned. The best way to do this is to allow the cold water from the faucet to flow rapidly over the bristles. Shake off the excess water and hang the brush in the sunlight to dry. Never hang the brush so that its bristles can touch the bristles of another brush. If you use a drinking glass as a toothbrush holder, never allow any one else to keep his brush in your glass. Never use an old toothbrush. When the bristles of a brush begin to come out, throw it away, as the bristles may become lodged between the teeth or stick in the gums and injure them.
