Wabash News

Jack West and Clifford D. Browne have accepted employment at the government quarries, which are being operated again this spring with a large force.

Last Tuesday, P. H. Clarke, Parker Otte and Bert Colbert were in Weeping Water to look after the transaction of business and while there enjoyed meeting many of their friends.

Louis Schmidt was called to Murdock last Wednesday to look after business and found the hail storm and rain that was prevailing rather tough to negotiate, as the roads were plenty slippery.

William Murfin, who has been ill for so long a time, has been showing good improvement and was able to be down town several times last week, getting out on nice days, but is not yet able to return to his work.

The road a mile south of Wabash, which is being graded and rock surfaced should be completed at a not far distant date. The grading is completed from Weeping Water to the corner a mile south of town, but the spreading of the rock has not been started as yet.

To Make Home in Cook
In the reappointment of Missouri Pacific track workers for this division, Guy Hinds was offered work at Cook, Nebraska, and so last Monday, with the members of his family departed for there, taking with them sufficient household goods to get along and leaving the balance here.

Farmers Shelling Corn
Many of the farmers in the vicinity of Wabash have been shelling and delivering their last year's corn crop to the Wabash elevator, getting the corn off the farm while the weather was good and out of the way before the rush of spring work. Thus, the elevator force has been kept pretty busy handling the grain.

Graduates from Beauty School
Miss Geraldine Schmidt, who has been a student in an Omaha beauty college, graduated last week. Saturday she went to Lincoln to take her examination before the state board. Her cousin, Miss Edith Funk, of Omaha, served as her model in the performance of the examination requirements. The parents of Miss Edith, with two other daughters and a son, drove down to bring their daughter and Miss Geraldine here and remained for a Sunday visit before returning to their home in Omaha.

There were 132 members of the class at Lincoln for the examination, a number too great to permit of handling all the applicants in one day, so Miss Geraldine and Miss Edith returned to Wabash and went back to Lincoln again last Saturday for their final tests.

REVISE STAMP CHANGE

WASHINGTON, April 5 (UP)—Postmaster General James A. Farley has ordered a complete revision of the program for altering the designs on postage stamps.

The changes will not affect the small denomination stamp. Washington's picture will remain on the 10 cent stamp and Jefferson on the 3 cent stamp.

LONDON, April 8 (UP)—The government, protesting today against the expropriation of British oil wells in Mexico, told the Mexican government that it "must formally request the restoration of properties belonging to the Mexican Eagle company." DENTISTRY and PUBLIC HEALTH

PLATTSMOUTH DENTAL SOCIETY

CHAPTER XLIX
"How do you feel?" asked Dr. Young, as Mr. Reynolds presented himself for his second treatment for Vincent's infection, often called "trench mouth."

"Much better, thank you," replied Mr. Reynolds. "My gums are still inflamed and sore, but I can close my teeth with comfort, which is something that I couldn't do yesterday."

"Fine," said the dentist. "It won't be long before you will be back to normal. You certainly have an active case of Vincent's infection."

"In an active or acute case of Vincent's infection such as you have, the gums become red and swollen and bleed easily, and they are usually covered by small grayish or yellowish patches. As you know from experience, the gums are extremely sore to the touch. In very bad cases the patient cannot eat solid food, because the gums are so sore that it is painful to close the teeth. Even the pressure of the lips and tongue is painful. The breath has a peculiar and characteristic odor. Sometimes, if the patient's resistance is low and the violence of the bacteria is high, the disease may spread to the throat and tonsils or even the entire system. Death has been known to occur from this disease."

"The passive or chronic type of the disease is much more prevalent than the active or acute type. Persons suffering from this chronic infection often develop a partial resistance to it and become accustomed to the mild pain and discomfort. The breath does not have the characteristic odor so noticeable in acute cases. The gums will be only slightly swollen—perhaps inflamed in but two or three spots. A patient suffering from this type of infection may be completely unaware that he is affected. Thus, he may unwittingly give the disease to others. The chronic type of trench mouth should not be mistaken for pyorrhea. It is always wise in case of trench mouth, pyorrhea, or any gum inflammation to have a "smear" taken of the infected gums and have it examined under a microscope. If there is a great preponderance of trench mouth germs present, the diagnosis will be confirmed."

As Dr. Young talked, he treated Mr. Reynolds' mouth. Before dismissing his patient, he said: "You must take the utmost precautions, Mr. Reynolds, to avoid infecting others by kissing or other direct contacts. Burn your toothbrushes and do not attempt to brush your teeth until we have the disease well under control. Later, buy some new brushes. Have your own eating utensils and towels, both of which should be boiled in soap suds. Don't let anyone use your drinking glass at the office. In order to avoid infecting others, do not eat in hotels or restaurants until your condition is well under treatment. Furthermore, unless we eliminate all pockets where the germs can hide, don't be surprised if you have a recurrence of the disease. Sometimes a case which is seemingly cured may recur from three to six months later, which shows that the bacteria are still present in these hidden spaces. "Vincent's infection, or trench mouth is much more prevalent than is commonly supposed. Anyone having infected gums should go to a dentist at once for a thorough examination and proper treatment."
