REGRETS ITS POLITICAL TURN

Thought it Was Simply a Talk on Law Enforcement When He Extended invitation to the Attorney General.

Roy, Marcus P. McClure, paster of First Presbyterian church, Council Bluffs, made DIES at the morning service Sunday what was evidently intended to be an apology for the character of the meeting held one week ago in his church, at which Attorney General H. W. Byers delivered his sensational address in arraignment of the gambling houses and the authorities who had permitted their existence.

So general was the opinion that the visit of Mr. Byers to Council Bluffs was more of a political move than anything else, that the meeting at the First Presbyterian church had come to be familiarly talked about as the Cummins Sunday night rally. So keen had been the criticism that members of the First Presbyterian church be-came indignant over what was said to be the dragging of politics into the pulpit of their church, and especially over the attacks bers of the First Presbyterian church bemade by Mr. Byers upon Council Bluffs citizens known to be political opponents of Governor Cummins. This being the situation, Pastor McClure deemed an explanation necessary.

There is not a man with whom I have talked but who has regretted that there was anything political or personal in the attorney general's address," said the pas-

But I want to state that in having Attorney General Byers here there was but one thought, and that was that it should bring about a better enforcement of law in Council Bluffs." After explaining that he had extended the invitation to the Ministerial association to hold the mass meeting in the First Presbyterian church because of its central location, Rev. Mr. McClure said:

"In the Presbyterian church the pastors have the right to invite persons to speak from their pulpits. Prior to this time, however, I had always conferred with the church officers before inviting anyone to address this congregation from the pulpit. In this instance, however, it never occurred to me that there should be any question in the matter. It was most remote from my
