Address of Ex-Secretary Shaw. After discussing some of the men who have been presidents of the United States

Mr. Shaw said:

When Theodore Roosevelt took the oath of office he announced that he would adhere to and follow out the policies of his predecessor. Fortunately, these policies were in full force and did not need to be strengthened. Therefore, within forty-eight hours, to his lasting-credit be it said, the new president was inaugurating policies of his own.

Universal prosperity and the sudden acquisition of wealth had wrought sad havoc with busiless morals. Love of power, whetted by indulgence, had led irresistibly to financial methods in some instances most reprehensible. The present administration has been most admirably fitted to the times. Notice has been served, and service has been accepted, that in this service has been accepted, that in this country the people are supreme, that the revised statutes of the United States constitute a most wholesome volume which can wisely be kept on the table around which directors regularly assemble, and that in the employment of counsel corporations do well to select men who will see to it that the operations of their clients are kept well within the limitations of the law, lest in their efforts to evade its spirit, they incur the penalties mentioned in the letter. service has been ac

In our evolution this has been one of the questions that had to be determined, and in my judgment no president has met the task that has come naturally to his hands with greater courage or more alg-nal success than has Theodore Roosevelt. Fortunate will we be if we drift not away from the high standards of civic and business ethics to which we have attained. ness ethics to which we have attained, and thus make necessary the repetition of leasons which have been taught in megsage, in legislative enactment and in judicial decree.

but believe the time has come to give primary consideration to the restoration of industrial and business activity.

The admitted leader of the opposition party, confident of his nomination at Denver, is just now seeking popular favor by announcing the unwise policy of a foolish Hebrew king: "My predecessor chastised you with whips; if elected, I will chastise with scorpions. My little finger shall be thicker than my predecessor's thigh." He seems to take the position that the knife should be kept ever on the table, the whip regularly cracked up and down the aisles, during intermission, and the revolver discharged through the open window, morning, noon and night. He fails to realize that excessive too frequent punishment is as subvertive of discipline as laxity.
