CAR COMPANY STARTS WORK

Begins with Construction on Twenty-Fourth Street.

LINE FROM CASS TO BURT

Starting at Twenty-Fourth and Leavenworth Monday Company Will Complete Another Crosstown Line.

Work will be started on the new Twenty-fourth street car line Monday morning, marking the real opening of spring work in Omaha. The appraisement has been made for cutting through Twenty-fourth street from Cass to Burt and the company hopes to have this part of the route cleared up and graded by the time the force reaches Cass street. Work will be begun Monday morning at Twenty-fourth and Leavenworth.

It was at first planned to use the Harney street line from Dodge to Creighton university, but that plan has been abandoned and the new line will run straight through from Leavenworth to Cumings street, with but a slight curve at Twenty-fourth and St. Mary's avenue. With the completion of this line it is now thought probable the cars will be run from Twenty-fourth and Cass direct to South Omaha, making a six miles run without a curve.

For some years the people of Omaha have been clamoring for a cross-town line through the residence districts and the company some time ago announced that such a line would be built. An effort was made to build a line from Thirty-third and Cass streets south to Hancock park, but opposition along the route caused this project to be abandoned. The company then determined to build from Farnam to Sixteenth street and Farnam streets. As the cars now run people going from the north side of Omaha to the south side, or from the south side to the north side, have to travel sixteen blocks out of their way, eight blocks east from Twenty-fourth to Sixteenth street and eight blocks back to the new line will save all this distance and save the company from hauling patrons that extra distance.

It is the purpose of the city officials to assess the levy for the opening of Twenty-fourth street upon a wide area of property, so the burden will not fall too heavy on a few.

LITTLE GIRL PLAYS TRICK

Eight-Year-Old Child Hides and Neighborhood Searches.

PARENTS FRANTIC WITH GRIEF

When Excitement Reaches High Pitch She Crawls Out from Boxes on Back Porch and All Are Happy.

Harriet Campbell, 8 years old, had a fine game of hide-and-seek Friday night and Saturday morning. Half the city detective and police force, her parents and a hundred friends were "in." The fact that they did not find her for fifteen hours proves that Harriet had hidden well.

Harriet is the 8-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Campbell, who live upstairs at 2004 North Twenty-fourth street. She was playing with her younger brother Friday evening on Seward street until about 7 o'clock, when Mrs. Campbell went out and brought the children in. To emphasize the maternal authority she picked up a little switch and followed the children up the stairs. Mrs. Campbell was busy in the kitchen for a few minutes and when she went into the sitting room Harriet was not there. The mother hurried out and walked around the block searching for the little girl, but in vain.

Mr. Campbell, who is an employe of the Orchard & Wilhelm company, returned soon. He was too alarmed to eat his supper, but started out at once to look for Harriet. A search in the neighborhood failed to find her. Then the police were notified. With Mr. Campbell and neighbors they searched all night, covering all the space between Cumings and Blondo and between Twenty-first and Twenty-seventh streets, walking every alley and peering into every byway and box and cellar with lanterns and searchlights.

Parents Are Frantic.

All was in vain. Parents were frantic with grief. Friends tried to console them with the hope that Harriet had gone to stay with friends during the night, as little girls sometimes do. But by this time the parents had almost given way to the most awful suspicions.

Among the friends who called about noon was Mrs. S. H. McCullough. With the stricken mother, she went out on the back porch. Suddenly both women started as a head was raised cautiously from between two coal boxes which stand on an adjoining porch.

"What's that?" cried Mrs. McCullough. They ran to the spot. There, crouching between the boxes, grimy and shivering, was Harriet. In an instant she was folded in her mother's tight embrace and covered with kisses in spite of the coal dirt.

"I saw the lanterns going around and heard the people talking," said Harriet, surrounded by rejoicing friends, "but I was afraid to come out. I was afraid I'd get a whipping."

Mr. Campbell was still searching with a party, but he was quickly summoned and learned the glad news. Harriet, after everybody had embraced her and kissed her, was put to bed by her mother and there is rejoicing in the Campbell home.

PHI RHO SIGMAS HAVE A TIME

Four Get Arrested, Some Sell Shoestrings and Wear Strange Placards.

Four students of Creighton Medical college were arrested in the Calumet restaurant at noon Saturday on a charge of stealing silverware. The young men were eating lunch at one of the tables, when the head waiter accused them of having placed several pieces of the silver in their pockets. They protested their innocence. The police were called; they were searched, and the silver was found in their pockets. They were taken to the police station and spent the rest of the day in a cell.

All of which was a joke. Saturday was the day of the initiation of sixteen candidates into the Phi Rho Sigma fraternity. The boys had a permit from the mayor to have a good time as long as they didn't break the law. The arrest of the four young men was part of the initiation.

Others of the candidates spent the day selling shoestrings on Farnam street, and one man solicited alms with a touching placard on his bosom stating, "I am not blind, but I need the money."

The initiation was completed last night at the Rome hotel with a banquet.

PLAN OF CITY INSURANCE

Method of Municipal Control to Relieve Families of Poor.

MICHAELSEN ADVOCATES SCHEME

City Electrician Believes It Could Be Made to Forestall Want and Necessity of Public Contributions.

Proposing a method of municipal control over industrial insurance, Waldemar Michaelson, city electrician, believes he has a method for relieving want among the poorer people of the city and absolute poverty of families of workmen killed or injured or confined by reason of lung sickness. The necessity of raising funds for the Drummy and McCartney families brings Mr. Michaelson's proposition to the fore at this time, though he is in hearty sympathy with the raising of money for these two families, having donated to both funds.

"In Denmark, Germany, and many other European countries the governments supervise life and accident insurance and every workman is compelled to pay monthly a certain amount, though very small, of his wage into the insurance fund. It is an excellent idea, and while I hardly feel confident of advocating the plan for the nation, still I think it would be a good thing for Omaha," said Mr. Michaelson.

Every Wage Earner.

Mr. Michaelson's idea is that the matter could be taken up by the ordinance, probably, and every wage earner in the city, resident or "floater," be compelled to pay a small amount of his monthly wages into the insurance fund. If the "floater" should leave the city, that which he has paid in would go towards the common good. In this connection he cites the charter provision compelling the city policemen and city firemen to pay 1 per cent of their monthly earnings into a relief fund. The tax is small and is not felt, he asserts, but in the aggregate it amounts to a considerable sum and comes in very handy on a "rainy day" for a member of either force.

"If this relief industrial insurance, supervised by the city, is a good thing for the policemen and firemen, why would it not be a good thing for every wage earner in Omaha?" is the pertinent question asked by the city electrician.
